Hard right's race jeers embarrass ministers

From Anthony Bevins, Political Correspondent, Blackpool

Conservative leaders were embarrassed and distressed yesterday by an open display of hard-right views on the issue of nard-right views on the issue of immigration and race relations in a Blackpool party conference debate that was littered with boos, jeers, hissing and the eventual ejection of a man who had heckled an Asian speaker repeatedly. repeatedly.

The motion for debate, which, significantly, had been selected initially, by popular ballot of conference representatives, urged the Government to end all further permanent immigration from the Indian subcontinent, to bolster volun-tary repatriation, and to repeal all race relations legislation. The conference decisively rejected the proposals, but senior mininsters were disturbed last night that what they regard as the nglier expressions of right-wing Torvism should have been Frank Johnson so dramatically displayed in front of the television cameras. Moving the motion, Mr. Henry Proctor, the ultra-right MP for Billericay, said: "I believe it to be in the best interests of black and white alike to say that enough is enough?"

He received particularly strong applause when he said that the Comission for Racial Equality should be abolished. It was profoundly un-Conserva-tive to believe that hearts and minds could be won over by legislation, and he added: "This is not racialism, it is realism".

But the most graphic scenes of the debate were reserved for the final speaker from the floor, Mr Paul Nischal, aged 40, an estate agent who had contested Birmingham, Small Heath, in the general election in June, Mr. Nischal, who came to Britain Nischal, who came to Britain from New Delhi in 1964, said that the only people now to the only people now to the only people now down were dependents and the denantied. A chant was then started up around the Winter Gardens Hall of : "Out, out, out", and two stewards moved in on Mr Tuson. The chairman of the conference, Mr Patrick Law-rence, said: "If he does not keep quiet I shall ask the stewards to take him out, in this organization we believe in free speech."

Winding up the debate, Mr David Waddington, Minister of State at the Home Office, said State at the Home Office, said that large scale primary immigration had ended long ago, that everyone was equal before the law, and that race relations legislation was designed to bring about equality of opportunity.

He also repudiated the compositions of right-wing connotations of right-wing demands for repairlation, say-ing "This Government is not in the business of telling people who have made their homes here, who perhaps have even become British citizens: 'You are inwelcome. Here is some money. Clear off.

Mr Norman Fowler, the Secretary of State for Social Services, received the acclain of his Cabinet coleagues yesterday after a strong reaffirmation at the Conservatibe conference of the Government's commitment to the health service, combined with a defence of his policy of manpower cuts. He was seen as having schieved a notable triumph in receiving a standing ovation after a debate in which the deep worries inside the party over the cuts and their presentation had been on view.

The relief of other ministers at Mr. Fowler's reception in potentially the most difficult debate was apparent. It is the issue on which many believe the Government to be most vulnerable to Labour.

Although his speech would not have removed the clearly-expressed doubts about the cuts, it was felt by MPs last night that Mr Fowler had secured his own position with a skilful perform-ance, in which he urged health authorities to direct manpower savings at administration rather than nurses.

He emphasized that the savings for which he had asked, 4,800 posts out of a total of 820,000, was half of 1 per cent. Frankly it is Indictous that a reduction of one half of I per cent of the staff of the biggest employers in Western Europe marks the end of the health service as we know it."

Yitzhak Shamir was plunged into political turmoil last night, less than a week after taking office, with the dramatic resignation of Mr Yoram Aridor, the Finance Minister. It came as Israel was enduring the most acute economic crisis in its

Mr Aridor's decision to quit followed a storm of protest both inside and outside the Govern-ment caused by the publication of a secret and sweeping Treasury plan to link the entire economy to the US dollar, which would eventually have become legal tender.

The so-called dollarization scheme was leaked by the Tel Aviv newspaper, Yediot Aharo-nor, and within hours led to angry calls for Mr Aridor to go. He submitted his resignation shortly before an emergency Cabinet session, the second since the Government was sworn is on Monday. Under the scheme - worked out behind closed doors - the dollar would have become the basis for the Israeli economy, and gradually replaced the ailing shekel, which was introed in 1980. Cabinet member, Mr Yitzhak Moda'i, the Energy Minister, dismissed the proposal as "tantamount to changing the the

Throughout the day, Muslim militiamen stormed the offices of the Lebanese Communist Party in the city, shooting their way into buildings and murder-ing most of those who survived the initial assaults. A cloud of black smoke hung over Tripoli as the fighting continued into the evening.

Ironically, the battles in the north are a continuation of the conflict there during the 1975-76 civil war and so the reconciliation talks - which are intended to consolidate the ceasefire in the Chouf mountains above Beirut - can have little immediate effect on the bloodshed around Tripoli.

day how he opened fire on a film editor during a police ambush in London in the mistaken belief that he was firing at David Martin, an escaped prisoner.

Det Constable John Deane described the events when Mr Stephen Waldorf was shot five times and seriously wounded as he sat in a yellow Mini in a traffic jam in Pembroke Road, Earls Court, west London, on January 14.

In a statement, read to the jury at the Central Criminal Court in the trial of Det Constable Peter Finch and Det Constable John Jardine, who have denied attempting to murder Mr Waldorf, aged 26, Constable Deane said that he had been part of a surveillance team in the area.

He was stationary in his van in Pembroke Road when he saw Constable Finch walking along the pavement. "I noticed he had Constable Finch walking along the pavement. "I noticed he had his gun in his right hand at arm's length, pointing towards the ground. Shortly after, I heard a shot ring out. I got out of our vehicle and heard more shots.

S African Coloured leader quits

From Michael Hornsby.

Mr David Curry, the chair-man of the Labour Party, the main political organization of South Africa's mixed race coloured population, has resigned, ostensibly to devote himself more fully to Coloured local government affairs.

Speaking by telephone from Bloemfontein, where he is attending a housing conference, Mr Curry insisted that his decision was taken for purely personal reasons and had no political significance. He said he would remain a member of the

Despite this disclaimer, Mr
Curry's resignation, which he handed in without warning to the party leader, the Reverend Allan Hendrickse, was widely seen as evidence of strains within the party over its decision to participate in the Government's new constitutional structure.

The Government's Constitution Bill would create a new tricameral Parliament for whites. Coloureds and Indians. Blacks, more than 70 per cent of the total population, would continue to have no parliamentary representation. The Bill has already been passed by the existing all-white Parliament and will be implemented if a majority of whites vote for it at a referendum on November 2.

Under pressure, Mr Hendrickse has asked the Prime Minister, Mr P. W. Botha, for a separate referendum to be held to test Coloured opinion, a request which has so far received no-answer. Mr Hendrickse said yesterday that if such a referendum wen held and produced a "no' majority, his party would have to reconsider its position. the most of your money. New and existing investors in Abbey

A split has developed between Embassy in Moscow would the KGB (secret police) and the Soviet Foreign Ministry over how to respond to the expulsion of suspected Soviet spies from the West. Soviet sources said rand ordered the expulsion of 47 Soviet diplomats and offithe KGB, headed by General Chebrikov, favoured retaliation in most cases, while the Foreign Ministry under Mr Andrei Gromyko took a more cautious view.

Sources said Mr Gromyko had successfully dissuaded the security services from precipi-tous action on a number of occasions, arguing that the consequences would rebound on the Soviet Union at a time when it was seeking to impress West European public opinion on the arms issue.

Observers see this approach as part of a policy designed to divide Western Europe from the United States at a time when Soviet sources said the KGB the Western alliance is under had wanted to retaliate immedisome strain over the question of ately for the Irish expulsions in arms reductions and relations with Moscow. The Soviet calculation is that European order to "teach Britain a lesson" indirectly, and to warn Dublin "take orders from leaders take a more pragmatic and less ideological attitude London" in security matters.

Sources said the most recent case involved two Soviet diplomats expelled from Ireland last month on charges of espionage. Mr Viktor Lipassov, second secretary at the Embassy in Dublin, was ordered out on September 14, together with his wife. Mr Gennady Salin, first secretary, was in Russia on home leave at the time and was told by the Irish authorities not to return. Mr Lipassov had taken a holiday cottage not far from the bonder with Northern Ireland, sources said. The British anthorities had become alarmed at the Soviet diplo-mats' activities in a "sensitive area", including their contacts with IRA sympathizers. British and Irish security services had cooperated in investigating the

The short answer is yes, some do.

Every week hundreds of thousands of advertisements appear for the very people they are addressed to.

A handful do not. They misrepresent the products they are advertising.

As the Advertising Standards Authority it is our job to make sure these ads are identified, and stopped.

> WHAT MAKES AN ADVERTISEMENT MISLEADING?

If a training course had turned a 7 stone weakling into Mr Universe the fact could be advertised because it can be proved.

But a promise to build 'you' into a 15 stone he-man would have us flexing our muscles because the promise could not always be kept.

'Makes you look younger' might be a reasonable claim for a cosmetic.

But pledging to take years off your life' would be an overclaim akin to a promise of eternal youth.

A garden centre's claim that its seedlings would produce 'a riot of colour in just a few days' might be quite contrary to the reality.

Such flowery prose would deserve to be pulled out by the roots.

If a brochure advertised a hotel as being 5 minutes walk to the beach, it must not require an Olympic athlete to do it in the time.

As for estate agents, if the phrase overlooking the river translated to backing onto a ditch, there would be nothing for it but to show their ad the door.

HOW DO WE JUDGE THE ADS WE LOOK INTO?

Our yardstick is The British Code of Advertising Practice.

practical guidance on what they can and cannot say. The rules are also a gauge for media owners to assess the acceptability of any advertising they are asked to publish.

The Code covers magazines, newspapers, cinema commercials, brochures, leaflets, posters, circulars posted to you, and now commercials on video tapes.

The ASA is not responsible for TV and radio advertising. Though the rules Nearly all of them play fair with the are very similar they are administered by we or the public challenge to bac to their claims with solid evidence.

If they cannot, or refuse to, we ask them either to amend the ads or withdraw them completely.

> Nearly all agree without any further argument.

In any case we inform the publishers, who will not knowingly accept any ad which we have decided contravenes the Code.

If the advertiser refuses to withdraw the advertisement he will find it hard if not impossible to have it published.

WHOSE INTERESTS DO WE REALLY REFLECT?

The Advertising Standards Authority was not created by law and has no legal powers.

Not unnaturally some people are sceptical about its effectiveness.

In fact the Advertising Standards Authority was set up by the advertising business to make sure the system of self control worked in the public interest.

For this to be credible, the ASA has to be totally independent of the business.

Neither the chairman nor the majority of ASA council members is allowed to have any involvement in advertising.

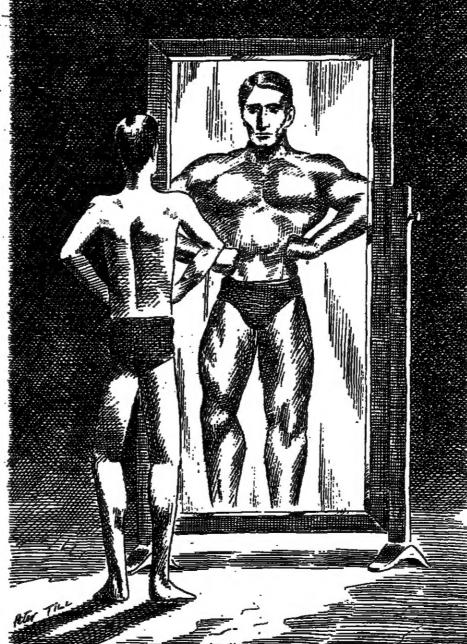

Though administrative costs are met by a levy on the business, no advertiser has any influence over ASA decisions.

Advertisers are aware it is as much in their own interests as it is in the public's that honesty should be seen to prevail.

If you would like to know more about the ASA and the rules it seeks to enforce you can write to us at the address below for an abridged copy of the Code.

At Dundo airport there was not a single military aircraft. The Angolans are clearly not taking Savimbi's boasts very seriously, although on December 18 last year a three-span bridge over the River Cuilo, on the main road from Luanda to Dundo, was blown up and lorries on that route are continually being attacked by rocket fire.

Unita's claims have caused some anxiety, though. Early on the morning April 6 this year Peter Heap, manager of the Lucapa mine, 50 miles south of Dundo, was telephoned by a colleague farther up the road. The BBC World Service had just announced that Unita had claimed the capture of

'l went and looked out of the window. Everything seemed quite so I went off to work as usual", said Heap, 35-year-old Yorkshireman who lives there with his wife and two small children. "A Unita attack is a worry but not a preoccupation."

The diamonds and the 700 or so expatriates (including 120 Britons) who work on the mines may, however. better protected than at first appears. On November employees of a shadowy British firm called Defence Systems International arrived at the mines, ostensibly to help to stop smuggling. But the men, who are still there, have military backgrounds, and many of them are ex-SAS. One told me he had been recruited privately and had no experience of preventive security operations. Like all expatriates, he denied having any access to weapons.

An attack from across the Zaire border is a much greater worry. The first town across the border is Kolwezi, where in 1977 and 1978 mine workers were attacked and killed by Zairean exiles who had been living in Angola.

Where De Beers has been solely concerned to stop smuggling, it has employed tough and dramatic methods - and, as in the case of Fred Kamil, tough and dramatic people. Kamil, a Lebanese who had been the godfather and bandit chief of the smugglers' trail that took diamonds from Sierra Leone to Liberia, was hired by De Beers in 1956 to end the smuggling. He did this by ambushing the caravans. Later he fell out with De Beers, tried to hijack an aircraft to extort money from them, and has claimed responsibility for the recent bomb attacks aimed at Oppenheimer interests in London.

The diamond trade is not an easy one to investigate. I asked the Department of Trade for a briefing about it. Their representative phoned back to say it was a one-company business and that the company in question, De Beer, demanded that all the information it gave the department should be held in confidence. The spokesman conceded that information on no other commodity was suppressed at the request of a private company. .

She said she had phoned De Beers to ask whether it could help me, but gathered from the company that I had already been in touch." I had. Charming and courteous it was, but De Beers keep the secrets of the diamond tradeas well protected as the diamonds.

The only loser in the diamond trade seems to be the lovelorn sucker who buys an engagement ring. The price of diamonds is controlled by De Beers. It owns many of the chief gem mines. makes exclusive contracts with the owners of the other mines and buys up whatever else appears on the open market. Much of it goes into the stockpile with which it manipulates the market. "Producer cooperative" is the phrase De Beers itself uses to describe the business, but it does not quite express the control it enjoys over the trade. Handling more than 80 per cent of all uncut gems it exerts enormous influence over the cutters and dealers. De Beers can prevent their buying elsewhere by threatening to withhold their regular supply, and discourage a second-hand trade so that diamonds do not keep their value.

No other commodity has ever been so tightly controlled by one man. De Beers is part of the Anglo American and Consolidated Goldfields groups. all sections of which are controlled by Harry Oppenheimer, the self-effacing, liberal monarch of the transnational, South African-based mineral empire.

Not even giants such as the Soviet Union or Zaire have managed to break the De Beers' cartel. Nor do they choose to leave it. It would not benefit any diamond producer to allow the diamond to find its own production or price levels in the market place. Angola is a new-born state ravaged by war and its leaders know little of the diamond world. It is at the mercy of De Beers.

Diamonds were first discovered in Angola in 1912. They are among the finest gems in the world. The Portuguese mined them until 1975, when they were producing more than two million carats a year. In the chaos that followed independence and the nationalization of the private Portuguese holding, production dropped to ess than half a million carats in 1977. Although the Government now owns 77.21 per cent of the shares in the diamond company, and De Beers owns only 1.6 per cent, Angola has been forced to turn to De Beers not only to sell its diamonds but also to mine-

Mining and Technical Services, another De Beers company, is incorporated in Liechtenstein but its London office backs on to the De Beers complex at Holborn Circus. It was formed in the early 1960s to deal with black African countries for whom a direct relationship with a South African company was politically out of the question. Angola, where the company has operated since 1977, is its biggest and most sensitive operation.

The Portuguese mined the river beds but now De Beers insists that the Angolan company mines the alluvial terraces. River beds such as the one at Dunge, the furthest west of all the mines, offerdramatic but unpredictable results. The river has been diverted by a great damand the ravine excavated. At the bottom the heavy diamonds, battered and sifted by acons of annual floods, have gathered into nooks where they can be found by the score. At times there is one Angolan guard, armed with a Russian-made Klashnikov rifle, for each Angolan worker. One worker had been shot a few days before I arrived. It was not clear that he had been smuggling.

Angola does have a serious smuggling problem. According to Sr Alberto Bento Ribeiro, the Minister of Industry, Angola has lost $100m of diamond revenue in the past 18 months through smuggling, possibly one third of total production. Diamang, he said, will make no profit this year - an extraordinary situation for a diamond producer.

As we drove south by Land Cruiser along the straight red-dirt road which rolls over the hills to Lucapa, we passed a new motor-cycle weaving unsteadily in the other direction. Des Jenkin, the security adviser with MATS, wrinkled his nose, "A sure sign of smuggling", he said. "The workers will swap a diamond for a new pair of shoes. A motor bike is quite a good

There is something peculiarly painful about being ahead of a trend. All those people who had been shouting the praises of ragime from the rooftops, unheard, must have experienced very bitter-sweet emotions when Joshua Rifkin came along and made Scott Joplin famous overnight. "That's the way to do it. But how did they do it? Ah, the cunning devils." t's true. The word of mouth thing does work. People occasionally whisper to me that the malt whisky is the Macallan, which I became convinced of, till people started whispering to me that Cardhu was the malt whisky. I even went out and bought a bottle of Cardhu, and indeed it was very good; my children, temporarily abandoning clothes and haircuts, tested it and urged me to buy some more. But in all these cases I was behind a trend already. What I'd like to be, fleetingly and unworthily, is just ahead of a trend.

But before I could put pen to paper it was already being written about, so it is no good to me as a trend; I am already four or five days behind.

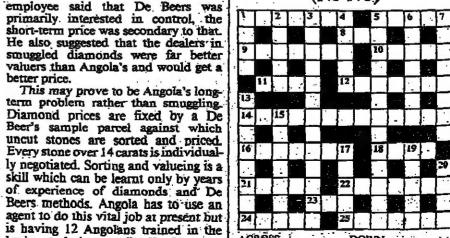

And then it suddenly occurred to me that there is one trend I am ahead of and will always be ahead of. Pisco. Pisco is a Peruvian spirit, colourless and strong, which I encountered in Peru three years ago in the shape of pisco sc-t, a sort of cocktail made from frothed egg white, think, cinnamon. It is lethal and lovely, and though well known to every visitor

Chilean pisco! What an outrage It is like boasting of English whisky or French stout. The Chileans and the Peruvians have never got on very well, being next door neighbours, and to make it worse the Chileans have always been a touch more enterprising, but when it comes to marketing a Peruvian drink . . . Still, it solves my problem. I am ahead of the Peruvian pisco trend and If Peru keeps up its present marketing strategy, I always will be. How nice to be able to

Preventing cot deaths

The deaths of four month old Saman-tha and Gabrielle Connelly last weekend bring home once again the horrors of cot death.

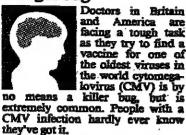

In spite of a vast amount of research doctors still do not know why the victims die. They can suspect only breathing difficulties or digestion problems.

At Sheffield Children's Hospital and the London School of Hygiene and Tropical Medicine, however, doctors have taken a different approach for ten years now. Instead of seeking a cause for cot deaths they are trying to prevent them.
Since 1973 the doctors assessing ways of spotting children in danger have found that babies born to young mothers who already have several children are most at risk. The extra attention these babies have received in Sheffield over the years has prevented at least 50 cot deaths in the city, they estimate. Now doctors in other parts of the country are trying out the system.

According to Dr Paul Griffiths, CMV expert and senior lecturer in virology at the Royal Free Hospital in London, in the UK alone CMV is responsible for around 400 mentally handicapped babies a year - this is more than german measles.

The difficulty is that CMV, like other viruses in the herpes group to which it belongs, has learned to survive in the body even when the immune system has produced antibodies. Dr Griffiths and other workers are trying to find out if these antibodies can at least stop CMV from getting across the CMV from getting across

Euthanasia

A challenging report of the views of 78 parents of Down's Syndrome children has appeared in the most recent issue of the Journal of Medical Ethics. The parents, who clearly have much more direct experience of the consequences of present practice than any pro-fessional, were questioned on their opinions on abortion for handicapped foctuses as well as cuthanasia. For compassionate reasons the differences between active and passive enthanasia were not pressed. Most of the parents were in favour of abortion for handicapped foetuses, though the picitire was much more complicated for cothanasia. Parents were more likely to consider acceptable enthanasia for severely handicapped babies if they were from prosperous households than those parents in lower social classes. But if the handicapped was Down's there was no such clear-cut divide.

Cold comfort

One of the most side distressing side therapy is rapid loss of hair. Cytotoxic drugs are intended to destroy cancer cells but, as well as wiping out the baddies, because their action is indiscriminate they knock out many other active cells including hair follicles. Over the last two years some patients have been spared the distress by wearing a "cold cap" while the drugs are injected. The patient's hair is usually.

dampened to improve conduction and the cap is put in place about 20 minutes before the injection until about 30 minutes after. This chills the scalp so the blood supply to the hair follicles is temporarily suspended while the drug is "fixed" in other parts of the body.

Victoria Hamilton: "People said it was a good thing he was dead as he was just a trained killer"

The big softie who fought to the last

A half smile flickers across the face of Victoria Hamilton as she sorts through the few precious photo-graphs of her life with Captain John Hamilton, MC of the Special Air Service, who died a hero in the last days of the Falkands war. "We both knew he was going to die, that he wasn't coming back", she says.

"John just would not let go of my hand when it was time finally to go. He said he might be going to war and might not be coming back, and Thank you for being such a super wife. He said 'I can go knowing you're behind me all the way. His men had to say 'Come on Boss' to get him to let go. Then they drove Captain Hamilton was concerned about the effect his career in the SAS about the effect his career in the SAS had on his wife: "He only joined knowing I would be happy letting him go and I realized all the dangers but I also know how much he enjoyed it. John could appreciate how in some ways being in the SAS is a very selfish thing. But he cancelled once and was so miserable.

"After he was killed it upset me very much that people came up to me and said it was a good thing he killer. I even stopped having my hair done. When people find out your husband is in the SAS they think

Born in Harrogate, Yorkshire Hamilton was educated at the Royal Masonic Schools: motto Aude, Vide, Tace - Hear, See and Be Silent. Close friends at school were surprised he had become an SAS man. They knew a very quiet boy who wanted to become a doctor but whose A levels were not good

After a year off, he finally drifted into the Green Howards, mostly because of his fascination with the lonely sport of climbing. "He used to try to get me climbing mountains", says his wife. "If I am killed on a mountain, he would say, 'I want you to know why I had to do it. One day the only way I could get him to come down was to take my boots off and throw them down the mountain. Then he had to carry

I owe it to him to carry on. I don't want to let him down

They met in Berlin at a Green Howards curry lunch while Victo-ria's father was a diplomat there: Our honeymoon was in Austria, climbing of course. He was a terribly physical person. He used to make his men at the Green Howards run with sand-weighted belts and when he left they gave him one for his dog Marcus." Not surprisingly Marcus has remained at the SAS barracks in Hereford; probably the only place on earth he can get the exercise he is Hamilton regarded his military career very seriously and it took him to Cyprus, South Armagh, Belize and even the French Commando School at Trier: "But he never broke a bone, he was so careful", his widow says.

He is unique in being the first of more than 30 SAS troopers to die a "soldier's death". Many think he should have got the VC, but viewed at a distance it was a rather perplexing "sacrifice", which is how even official reports refer to it.

A senior Falklands official, who had close contact with the SAS, said that the Argentines who surrounded the two men waited for one of them to go to the latrine before shooting Hamilton in the back in the hills near Port Howard. "There is some truth in that story", said Mr Robin Lee, of Port Howard, who helped bury Hamilton. "It was the reason why the radio was not being

"We discovered that there were four SAS, two that went to observe the Argies and two who stayed back. That was Hamilton and a Fijian sergeant. They were surrounded and taken by surprise. The Argies told us later of how John fought to the last."

"He was medically minded and probably realized he was not going to come through", said Victoria. "The only possible way out would have been the water. I have seen it: it was very cold and they wouldn't have survived." So in the knowledge of almost certain death he fought on. Victoria has a picture of this other Hamilton, a stern warrior with an automatic rifle

"I worry about the time between when he was shot in the back and the shot that killed him. Did he worry about me and the dog before he was killed? I hope not. He did not go out there to be killed, but if he had to die he would have preferred to die properly as he did, fighting the enemy", she says.

"To go down in history as one of the best officers to wear the SAS badge would have meant so much to him. His life and death have a meaning. We loved each other so much it does not matter if that was what he wanted." But there is an unspoken tension between being proud of her husband "dying well" and wondering why he chose to die

In his personal diary Hamilton often wrote a few words of love for his wife. He also carefully listed the numbers and types of aircraft he blew to pieces on Pebble Island. But there is no clue as to what he felt.

The colonel who commanded the Argentine troops later said of him: "He is without doubt the most courageous man I have ever seen", and asked for a flag to bury him. The truculent locals wouldn't give him one and later reburied Hamilton

The Argentines gave back Hamilton's belongings. "It all came with a long list in Spanish", said Victoria. "They even spelt his name right. They sent back a picture of us taken on ilkley Moor which was in a plastic wallet with some of my hair. They were not really meant to carry rings and things. They even gave back his watch. "When the really dreadful helicopter crash occurred at sea I went to see other wives. In a way it prepared me for what happened. One has to accept people being killed. John and I sat down and talked about what I would do if he were killed doing so and so. You have to, but you never really know what will you do. For six months I was numb. But John died so bravely I owe it to him to carry on. I don't

Until last month I was the editor of Honey magazine. For three years I had the cubious privilege of holding this title; for three years I worked with the staff to make Honey different from other magazines directed at young women; for three years we struggled - and in the end failed - to prove the obvious to our owners (IPC); you simply cannot perceive all women as creatures with no interests beyond their love life and their "split ends." Naturally, we did address the problems of relationships. fashion and beauty. But we did more than that. Our doctors and nurses may have fallen in love in our fiction; our feature writers tackled the burning issue of private medicine. Yes, we did profile the glam film stars; we also profiled Timothy Mo and Harriet Harman. There was plenty of news about cosmetics; and news, too, about the ecological destruction needed to make some of

Not so much a spare rib, more a succulent casserole with a dozen ingredients. Honey lived as a support and a friend to the 150,000 women who rushed out to by it every month because it accurately reflected their own breadth of vision.

It was a bright and exciting time for all of us who were involved. But it came to an abrupt end last mouth when, out of the blue, I was sacked. The reason? They have market research, they say, which proves that women don't want what we put on offer - they only want fashion and beauty spiced with a bit of emotion and romance.

Thus we find ourselves in the ludicrous position of having newsagents' shelves full of women's magazine putting forward images and ideals of women as determined and dreamt up by men. Some months ago, I put my male dominated theory to the managing director of the National Magazine Company (Cosmo. She, Good House keeping) and asked him how as someone who has never been a journalist or a woman he feels competent to hold down his job. His reply was that he can't play the piano, but that doesn't mean he can't tell when it's well played.

These, then, are the maga-zines - and the editors - to whom he lends his support.
One senior IPC executive s on record as saying he "wouldn't allow" his 20-year old daughter to read my version of Honey. Leaving aside the Victorian notion that fathers can still have control over their adult offspring, how can he remove his own set of ideals for his daughter from his decision whether to publish or not?

And whose problem is it? His, mine - or his daughter's? In the end, of course, probably his daughter's.
For myself, I suppose I'm destined to another hundred consecutive parties where one these bright, thinking advancing young women will come up to me and say sorry, they don't read women's magazines - they all seem to be meant for someone else.

His Lordship was content to accept, as had the Supreme Court of Victoria in R v Salisbury [[1976] VR 452) that there could be an infliction of grievous bodily harm contrary to section 20 without an assault being committed.

The critical question therefore was whether - it being accepted that a charge of inflicting grievous bodily harm contrary to section 20 migh not necessarily involve an allegation of assault, but might nonetheless do so, and in very many cases would involve such an allegation – the allegations in a section 20 charge "include either expressity or by implication" allegations of assault

Comedy.

Even without the rumour of subterranean alligators, there is strong sense of monsters preeding down in the New York sewers, along with the corpses of extinct Broadway shows, and both horrors rise to the surface in Howard Ashman's musical.

Mr Ashman tells the tale of Seymour, backroom wonder boy in a dead-end flower shop. who saves the place from going bust by producing a hitherto unknown plant 1313 Skid Row is instantly besieged with big-spending customers, the boss adopts Seymour as his son, and even the delectable sales clerk, Audrey, begins to look at him with melting eyes. The only trouble is that the plant (Audrey II) feeds exclusively on human blood, for which its appetite matches its alarming growth. Upright, Audrey II looks something like a desert cactus; nosing down to earth and roaring its rock 'n' roll demands for food. it resembles an eyeless crocodile or an amphibious green shark. Martin P. Mr Ashman has described this story as an updated version of the Faust legend. It could equally well apply to the Bomb, or to any doomsday discovery that is keeping a few people in business for the time being. Alternatively, you could see it as an ugly racist fable on the danger of nourishing aliens in our midst. The fact that it can cut in so many directions is proof that Mr Ashman is on to a genuine myth; and his production lets it do its own work, going straight to the point with maximum energy. By presenting the fable as a musical, not only does he gain laughs, but also intensifies its melodramatic force by setting up the expectation of a happy ending. Opera and Scotland are going to have to make up their minds about each other. After three years of lurching from crisis to crisis Scotland's national opera company is on the brink. The issues have finally crystallized around the central question of local service versus national prestige. If the argument goes one way the general adminis-trator will resign, if it goes the other substantial new money will have to be

The present phase of Scottish Opera's problems began in the summer of 1980 when the company slumped into a deficit of £440.000 and a recovery programme was launched. All seemed to be progressing well and a new general adminis-trator - John Cox, who had been director of productions at Glynde-hourne for 10 years - was appointed. He took up his post in July last year and by October he had discovered that the recovery programme was wildly off course. Scottish Opera was

Cox cut back as much as he could. but it was too late, and the feared deficit materialized. Only with the aid of a grant of £235,000 from Glasgow, and another £400,000 squeezed out of the Government's f.5m one-off payment for the arts earlier this year, could the company survive. But that still left them well in

This year Cox has restricted the company to six performances each of eight operas at their Glasgow base -the 1,500-seat Theatre Royal - and some English touring, the marginal costs of which are covered by the Arts Council in London. What is all too obviously missing is any Scottish obviously missing is any Scottish touring, which is the key role for the company laid down by the Scottish Arts Conneil.

> The SAC's subsidy comes to just under £2.4m this year, representing 21 per cent of the council's total budget. It has no intention of letting that percentage rise. Meanwhile local authority money has dwindled from £170,000 four years ago to £90,000 last year. On these figures Scottish Opera has a choice it can restrict itself to 38 performances in Glasgow next year, with some English touring, or it can topr in Scotland with ruthlessly restricted production costs.

The SAC has threatened to cut the subsidy completely unless the com-pany knuckles under and becomes a local, low-cost tourer. At present these are the extreme parameters of the negotiation, but Cox has forced the pace by saying, in the company's yearbook, that this season may be the last, and by dumping the company's detailed proposals for next season in was contracted to run.

The pressure could yet be eased if a meeting with George Younger, the Secretary of State for Scotland, later this month produces anything. Hopes are reasonably high as it was an appeal to Younger which brought the £400,000 earlier in the year. And both sides are agreed that more money is what is required.

But the wider significance of the crisis lies first in the questions it raises about the regional policy on arts subsidy. As the result of a longstanding anomaly Welsh National Opera receives £1m more in susbidy than Scottish Opera, because it accepts London money on a base arrangement - involving contributions to production costs - rather than a marginal-cost arrangement for its productions in England. The SAC rejected this some years ago, wishing to retain its autonomy as the sole funder of the Scottish arts companies. Scottish Opera is now paying the price of the SAC's national pride and is frankly more inclined to support the proposals of the Priestley Scrutiny on the English national companies - that funds should come direct from central government.

Secondly, of course, it raises the whole question of the regional commitment to this most expensive of all the arts. Rumbles have been heard from the SAC about what role something as expanagant and nonindigenous as opera has in its country. There is, of course, no short answer, which leaves us back where we started: opera and Scotland are going to have to make up their minds about each other.

and has no known enemies, they told us in BBC2's Open Space last night with rather a courtroom ring. The badger's business and diet are helpful to the countryside and he would be quite happy left to his own devices. Parliament acknowledged his good citizenship in 1973, passing the Badger Act, meant to stop people badgering him and turning him into shaving brushes or sporrans.

Non-Scots and users of electric razors could therefore watch last ment's film, by the 22-year-old Graham Horder, who spent 40 nights outside badger sets to make his The Badgers of Gwent, with a clear conscience.

Gwent was the first place to form a group to protect badgers and try to ensure that the Badger Act was enforced. A network of similar groups is now established round country. Despite this, the badger is still baited - a horrifying process - and ill-used though this will hopefully decline as the groups get on with their monitoring, mapping and numbering of the badgers

Apart from ourselves, the badger is Britain's largest carnivore. If we are unkind to it we also lack consideration to each other. Watching G. F. Newman's The Nation's Health on Channel 4 last night, the plight of the badger receded swiftly.

Mr Newman's pigy was called Decline. Last week's was Acute and we can look forward to Chronic and Collapse in the next weeks. His thesis, in a nutshell, is that medicine and medical people have become too technological, leaving healing and humanity behind. His seeker after unpalatable truth in this series is Dr Jessie Marvill, who is to descend the hill of disillusion in all four plays.

The series is already far into "overkill". Mr Newman who, I understand, does not have a dostor and might, after this, not find one easily, is putting all his bad eggs in one basket to the detriment of a message that might otherwise be salutory. The series is likely to hold only masochistic doctors and apprehensive medical students for the duration of its run.

Odd goings on at the residence of the Indian High Commissioner, Dr. V. A. Sevid Muhammad, who will welcome the Queen and Duke of <sup>2</sup>Edinburgh to a dinner later this month in honour of the royal visit to India in November. According to reliable sources, the house in Kensington Palace Gardens is now rapidly undergoing extensive rede-coration and refurbishment following a whirlwind visit last week by Mrs Gandhi on her way from New York to Delhi.

On inspecting the grade II listed building the Indian Prime Minister is said to have blown her top at the furniture and fittings. A spokesman for the High Commission insists, however, that the work is merely part of "normal maintenance".

Why the Democratic presidential front-runners are worried by the lesser lights

The battle of the images

Walter Mondale last week had his "dream week", winning in quick succession the massive endorsement of the AFL-CIO union organization and the National Education Association, then going on to trounce his Democratic rivals for the presidential nomination in a heavily-con-tested party "straw poll" in Maine.

Now it is the turn of his chief rival for the Democratic nomination. Senator John Glenn, to enjoy a spate of favourable media attention. On Sunday the film The Right Stuff, which portrays the former astronaut Glenn in a less prissy, more heroic light than in the Tom Wolfe novel on which the movie is based, had its glittering premiere at the Kennedy Center in Washington.

The previous evening the Glenn nomination campaign is to launch itself with a five-minute televised political commercial spectacular on prime time over the CBS network.

The Glenn campaign staff insist that the launch date of The Right Stuff and the film's flattering portrayal of their candidate are entirely coincidental with Glenn's own presidential ambitions. But they nevertheless concede that the fits in admirably with their overall strategy, which is to build up a tidal wave of popular support for Glenn, based on his fame as an astronaut and his reputation as an Eisenhower-style national hero.

Mondale's latest political successes and Glenn's impending media blitz (which has already begun with a cover story about The Right Stuff in Newsweek and extensive coverage in Time) mark the beginning of a more combative stage in the race to gain the Democratic Party's nomination to run for President in 1984. The seven declared candidates with an eighth. The Rev Jesse Jackson, expected to declare himself shortly - are now beginning to huri at each other the sorts of criticisms usually reserved for their common enemy, President Reagan.

Mondale, noting Glenn's hawkish support for the President's tax-cut legislation, has accused the Obio senator of being a lukewarm Democrat, too conservative to appeal to "real Democrats".

Glenn has responded by accusing Mondale of pandering to and becoming the captive of special interest groups. "Mondale runs the risk of being labelled 'union-owned and-operated," a member of his testfoormeasted staff commented.

Glenn has also continued to hammer away at the theme that the polls persist in showing him as the Democratic challenger President Reagan fears most.

The intensity the Democratic race has taken on at this early stage - with still more than 400 days to go before the election takes place - has largely been caused by the demands of next year's calendar for primaries and state caucuses, which will select the 3,931 delegates to attend the Democratic Party convention in San Francisco in July.

Because so many key primaries and caucuses are being held early next year, 45 per cent of the April 1. This means that it is vital for candidates to make a big impact early on, particularly if they are to pick up the political "megabucks" which a candidate needs if he has any chance of winning.

feminists, blacks Hispanics. He now hopes that endorsement by the AFL-CIO will e follow ed by open backing from influential state and city Democratic bosses, such as Mario Ciomo in New York, who have so far been reluctant to join his band wagon.

Glenn's strategy, on the other hand, has been to ignore the party's special-interest components and appeal over their heads to the rankand-file Democrats and to the uncommitted

"Mondale's strategy is ... an organizational, constituency-based strategy", said Greg Schneiders, Glenn's press secretary. "In the Glenn - campaign, we place a premium on communication that goes directly to the voters. While not gnoring organization, it is possible that organization will turn out to be like sand castles on the beach when a tidal wave comes in."

At present Mondale is well ahead in the fund-raising stakes. But Glenn is showing he can attract broad financial support, while outsiders, like Senator Alan Cranston, have been able to shower hundreds of thousands of dollars on their campaigns at this early stage, to ensure a good enough showing in "straw polls" and to keep alive the notion that this is not just a twohorse race. The Glenn campaign staff hope that the sand castles, such as Mondale's endorsement by the 14 million strong AFL-CIO, will be swept away by the forthcoming Glenn publicity wave. Glenn's attitude is that the AFL-CIO vote represented only the views of union bosses and that he enjoys broad support among ordinary blue collar workers, which will translate itself into a groundswell of support in time for next July's convention.

Mondale is worried that Glenn'is winning the "image" battle; that the former astronaut has effortlessly managed to retain his high ratings simply by being himself and by portraying himself as a national Mondale tends to be viewed as a politician" rather than a leader, an old-style Democrat given to "irres ponsibility in money matters and mushiness in national security issues", as columnist Joseph Kraft recently remarked. His past associ-ations with President Carter lead many to believe that he is incapable of beating President Reagan.

Mondale has tried to overcome "softie" image with some tough speech- making and by showing that he is as much a product of middle America as Glenn or Reagan. His main concern in the weeks ahead is the challenge posed to his candidacy by other candidates, which could erode his popular base.

Principal among these is Sen. Cranston, who gave Mondale a bloody nose in a "straw poll" in Winsconsin in the summer.

George McGovern and the Rev Jackson, if he runs, could also steal valuable support away from Mondale. Although most political ob-servers have written McGovern off as a lost cause, he performed surprisingly well in a recent opinion poli which showed he still appealed to left-wing Democrats.

Glenn's principal weakness at this stage, apart from his poor organization, is his ability to drop clangers which either alienate potential supporters or else show him to be uncertain of himself under pressure.

For the moment, however, the race between the two front-runners remains too close to call and remembering the Democratic Party's recent propensity for selecting an outsider - no one is yet completely writing off the others as

Don't be gung-ho about Hongkong

Canton is like a quarrel between the mouth and the belly. If they fight, the whole body suffers. Thus General Li Chai-sum, Governor of Canton province, half a century ago. The general, a sensible man, might have added that in any row between Britain and China, Hongkong would suffer most

We may be in for a difficult time on Hongkong. The Chinese some-times seem to be concerned about. the past rather than the future. They should worry more about today's Hongkong dollar, and less about yesterday's treaties. It does no one any good to talk (or rather shout) down the dollar, or to hold up the British as ravenous neo-colonials.

There are plenty of home-grown critics, too. Mrs Thatcher, we were told, was rash to raise the issue in the first place. Should she have just let Hongkong drift towards the rocks in the same way as our economy did before she took over? Others urge her to slap down a demand for an extension of the lease, and be damned. We would not be damned; Hongkong would. And finally she is encouraged to answer the Chinese back. How? By spelling out the message that China's own compatriots in Hongkong do not want her to run their lives or economy? Would that help the colony? You do not need to be Chinese to understand "face".

Now that the negotiations are soon to be resumed, it is a good time for coolness and charity. The first thing to be clear about is the economic interests of each party. These are not quite what they seem. To start with, let us for two reasons go a little easy on the argument that Hongkong is indispensable to China.

China would not lose all its foreign exchange income if it were rash enough to try to run Hongkong itself. The figure of 40 per cent of itsforeign exchange is tossed about. The real figure is probably closer to 30 per cent - still a lot, but some of this comes form reexports and would continue to flow to China, even in the worst case.

But in China, economic considerations do not always predominate. I spent several years there during the Cultural Revolution, and watched extreme politics and charryinism overrule common sense and selfinterest. The consequences were ugly, and expensive. I also once took part in some tense, secret negotiations (they were later leaked) in an obscure restaurant in Hongkong where we and the mainland representatives grappled with the problems of the overflow of the Cultural Revolution into the colony, during which more than 50 people had died. Our view was that while we ran the place, law and order would apply to "Maoists" as much as to anyone else.

The Chinese got the point then. But that experience, and some prettyhair-raising events along the frontier at the time, left me with a sober impression of the delicacy of the balance on which the territory rests. We now have a new China, but a Ching in which old demons and resentments still alumber - as shown by the tone of Peking's recent pronouncements on Hongkons. These people feel strongly that part of their territory has been alienated by force, and are tempted to take it

The Chinese will not, I hope, make the mistake of supposing that Hongkong is a great source of wealth revenue from it, although the balance of payments is in our favour. (A sensible settlement could leave us with most of our commercial interests intact.) Nor, I assume. do we wish to continue to run it to perpetuate imperial glory. Our chief concerns are thus moral and pragmatic: to do the best we can for Hongkong and its citizens.

In diplomacy, as in everyday life, the key question is often not what you want, but how you are going to get it. An uncompromising demand for an extension of the present lease would liquidate both empire and prosperity in short order. I doubt if anyone wants that. Those who assume that it is possible or prudent to negotiate in this way show no awareness of the simple power relationships; no understanding of Chinese national pride - the most powerful and volatile element in the whole equation; and so no practical. concern for the welfare of the Prosperity depends on a Sino-British entente about the future. I am convinced a settlement can be achieved, though it will not be forced out of the Chinese in adversarial negotiations. The main elements should be a continued. British presence in some form; a measure of autonomy; and the firmest guarantees available. The treaties are already a block to progress, and must inevitably at some stage be tacitly put aside.

We must think particularly carefully about our own role. The last thing we need is another case of responsibility without power. Is our desire to continue administering the territory so strong that we wish to do so even if we have no real control over events?

Look at the upheavals, the power struggles and the drastic reversals of policy in China over the last 15 years, and the West's inability to predict these sea changes. Is it necessarily in our interests, or in those of Hongkong, to seek blindly to perpetuate into the future arrangements which have worked well, in different circumstances, in the past?

It is impossible to imagine a large and stabilizing British presence (eg. in the Civil Service) short of complete responsibility. In the long run, this could offer a lower profile and more security for Hongkong. and less temptation for Peking to step in. Anyone wishing to posture on the sidelines of the negotiations should remember that tough talk alone, like "concern", never helped anybody. However tempted we are to call China's bluff, let us remember that we are dealing with not only an economy, but (as Mr Levin reminded us) with more than five million people and a distinct culture. Having once studied Tang poetry with a Hongkong Chinese tutor in an aromatic tenement near Wanchai, with the noise of the mah-jong games drifting through open windows, I am keenly aware of this aspect of our responsibility. The future of these splendid and resourceful people will not be secured by gladiatorial gestures, but only by calm, firm and persistent

We ken The Word the noo

Scotsmen. It has often been more potent, and sometimes more violent, than whisky. There is a popular view north of the border that God is a Scot, something like a white-bearded Wee Free minister, looking down in his infinite maircy on the miserable sinners howling in eternal flames, and telling them sternly: "Well, ye ken the noo". No doubt God speaks Scots. But until today there has been no translation of his Word in the Scottish tongue. Well, there is the noo, with the publication of The New Testament in Scots for the William Laughton Lorimer Trust by Southside, publishers, of Edinburgh. It is a majestic work of scholarship, filial piety, and charming humour. W. L. Lorimer was born at Strathmartine, near Dundee, in 1885, and became a classical scholar in the notable stables of Fettes and Trinity College, Oxford. His favourite reminiscence from Trinity was that one day a globe-trotting American asked the college porter, a Roman Catholic, "Whom do those statues on the tower represent? "Bless you, sir," the porter replied, "the 'oly Trinity". "But", said the puzzled American, "there are four of them". "That's right, sir", the porter assured him: "three persons - and one God".

Lorimer became one of the finest classical scholars in his country; he spent his life teaching Greek and Latin at St Andrew's, then at University College, Dundee, and finally as Professor of Greek at St Andrew's

As a boy of nine he had started to collect Scots words and phrases spoken by three aged and impoverished women pensioners who inhabited the cottar-houses behind his father's manse. He never forgot how much idiomatic Scots differed from English spoken with a Scots accent. And he devoted the last 10 years of of his life to his translati of the New Testament. His studies had persuaded him that the New l'estament isna written in Standard Diana Geddes and that "Jesus spakna Standard

It was probably composed by at least 12 different writers, ranging from Paul to the author of Revelations, and possesses no such uniform style as most of its translators have imposed on it. Lorimer accordingly refrained from using a uniform Standard Scots. Instead he took erudite care to differentiate the style in which he rendered each individual author's

It became a scholarly obsession to recreate dying Scots prose. He ransacked all available oral and literary linguistic sources; he was doing that anyway in his work for The Scottish National Dictionary. He consulted scores of learned scriptural commentaries, and scrutinized more than 180 other translations in more than 20 languages. It is one of the ironies of the Scottish class system that his mother had imposed the conflicting requirements on her children that they must try to learn as many languages as possible, but must not themselves speak Scotch.

Today Lorimer's son publishes his father's testament in Scots with funds raised by public subscription. I can see that it is tempting the de'il that lurks in the new technology of photocomposition, but, Gabriel Archangel of foreign tongues be with us, here is an example of a well-kent

Another bumper harvest - and probably of 1979 standard quality

The most sparkling success story is champagne, where the vines were expected to be "tired" after last year's exceptional effort, but which now look as if they will produce a record-breaking 330 million bottles, double the average of the preceding five years. Champagne stocks, which plummeted after the particularly poor harvests of 1978, 1980 and 1981, have already been brought back to a satisfactory 540 million bottles, and there is now talk for the first time in years of champagne prices remaining stable or even of actually falling slightly.

It is still too soon to predict with any certainty the quality of this year's wines, but most experts would agree with the general observation of M Edouard Dabadie, chief buyer for Nicolas wines, that while 1983 is not likely to be a great year, it will probably be a good year, similar in quality to 1979 or 1981.

In France - unlike in Britain, where only its table wines are sold -Nicolas is the leader in the quality apellation controllee market, with an annual turnover of £68m. The fall in domestic consumption of wine is causing the company serious con-

Twenty-five years ago, the French drank 140 litres of wine per head of population a year. Today's figure is 80 litres. Consumption of beer and spirits has gone up during that period, but the main switch has been to soft drinks - and water. As living standards have risen, people are drinking less, but better.

Corsican wine has been used in its place, but the result is not as Efforts are therefore being concen-

It is a myth to believe that you can buy a bottle labelled vin de table which is really surplus Chateau Margaux. Any AC wine produced above the quantity limits imposed for that vineyard in that particular year has to be thrown away or made into vinegar. It is illegal to sell it even as table wine. That rule is imposed to prevent vine growers from "over-producing". almost invariably results in a poorer quality wine. In practice, very little wine is ever wasted in this way. While wine consumption has been falling in France and Italy, the two greatest wine-bibbing countries, it has been rising in most other western countries. In Britain, it has almost tripled over the past decade from 2.9 litres per head per year to nearly 8 litres - though still way behind the 80 litres in France, 70 in Italy, 50 in Switzerland, and 25 in West Germany.

Britain, along with the US and a bottled wine is not necessarily a better wine than one bottled by a large wine house like Nicolas or Grants of St James's. It all depends on the expertise: a viticulturist may know all about tending vines, pressing grapes, and fermenting the juice, but little about the important bottling process.

Lastly, if you do go to a vineyard to buy your wine, make sure if possible that you bring back a sample bottle to try in your own home before committing yourself to one or several cases. ## IN A STATE OF UNCERTAINTY

The Conservative Party confer- for one who had, as party ence should have taken place in chairman, contributed much to an atmosphere of confidence and electoral victory. elation. The triumph of June 9 should have been celebrated by the presentation of a clear idea of how the Government will use its renewed power, and where it will invite the party and the country to follow it during the next five Parkinson was, in one sense, years. Yet since the election, both performance and the presentation of policy have been lacklustre and uncertain, Instead of being confidently on the advance, carrying public opinion with it, the Government has found itself on the defensive and it cannot be said that the conference, so far, has helped to restore its poise. The most valuable use that can be made of this conference is that it should serve as a warning that the Government cannot take anything for granted.

The unseemly public deployment of Mr Cecil Parkinson's unhappy personal problems has not helped the Government, or the Conservative Party, to keep their minds on their proper business, or to meet the public. with self confidence. By not resigning before he himself issued the statement which made his private difficulty public property, Mr Parkinson layed too much on his party and specifically too much on the conference which was on the point of assembling at Blackpool. It is not a question of measuring this unhappy episode against some precise scale of moral conduct, expressed in generalities, which infallibly and rigidly determines when and on what grounds a minister in embarrassing personal circumstances should resign. It is rather a question of the political instinct which, in all the circumstances of a particular case, should make it possible to foresee when resignation is desirable because the consequences of non-resignation would be damaging to the Government and the party.

The unseemliness of the public attention which was inevitably focused on Mr Parkinson and his difficulties at Blackpool was one such consequence. Another was the uncertainty about how to respond to in the generalities of amateur him or to refer to him. Ministers have had to sift their speeches for fear that some accidental double meanings might produce embarrassment. The conference itself, for fear of seeming to criticise him, was moved to receive Mr Parkinson with an

This response of the conference was understandable in a party which is always predisposed to unity and to respect for its leaders. The chivalry of the reception given to Mr touching. But the question why precisely they were cheering the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry quite so hard in itself expresses the essence of an unhappy episode which has not helped the Conservative Party to concentrate sufficiently on its proper business.

Doing so was, in any case, proving somewhat difficult. The general tiredness of ministers after the election and the fact that the Prime Minister was unwell before her eye operation, and was for a time naturally debilitated after it, did not help the Government to give a clear account of its intention for its second term. In particular, the Cabinet has shown signs of confusion in its approach to the public on the longer-term problem of public spending and an uncertainty of touch in handling the economies necessary to stay within its cash targets for the coming year.

It has laid itself open to the charge that, having committed itself to the National Health Service before the election so enthusiastically, and having taken pride in employing more doctors and nurses than ever, it has since imposed manpower restrictions which cover doctors and nurses as well as administrators and ancillary workers. The charge that it is indifferent to the well-being of the Health Service is one that substantially lacks substance. The Government knows it must be committed to uphold the NHS and its standards and if it had had any doubt yesterday's debate at the Tory Conference on the Health Service would have removed

One of the more attractive aspects of a Conservative conference is that debates on particular social questions bring to the rostrum people from the constituencies who are not speaking politicians but from their personal experience of a particular social service - in this case as members of local authorities, doctors, nurses and voluntary workers. Any idea that the active Conservatives, let alone the millions of Conservative voters, ovation that was excessive, even are less than committed to the

NHS on which they personally depend is absurd and Mr Norman Fowler rightly responded yesterday with a robust declaration of his own commit-

Nevertheless, questions still overhang the long-term prospect for public spending as a whole in which the welfare services are so large a part. Mr Nigel Lawson has restated his own determination as Chancellor to cut taxes and has done so somewhat more uncompromisingly than some of his colleagues think wise. It is not simply a question of how far tax cutting is possible without public spending cuts which might affect standards of the welfare services. It is also now a question of whether the Treasury was or was not right in its assessment last year that without a very drastic curtailment of public spending taxes far from being cut, would actually have to rise. In the present scene, the questions of economy through structural change and through candle-end savings have become confused and so has the size of the economies likely to be needed.

This uncertainty is partly because ministers currently give the impression of working, acting and speaking in their separate departmental roles rather than collectively as strategists. With two exceptions, those who have spoken for the Government at Blackpool have added little to the sum of knowledge or to the party's sense of direction. The Home Secretary had something new to say in announcing his decisions on sterner penalties for violent crime, and they were well devised. Mr Norman Tebbit shows much clearer signs than other ministers of knowing where he is going in his handling of the unions and how to get there. But other departmental ministers are plainly in need of inspiration and of the long view.

It is up to the Prime Minister today to begin the process of providing both. Not all her own judgments have lately been impeccable. But she is the leading politician of our time and she now needs to facilitate the emergence of a broad-based rship in the which she is backed by politicians who can be their own men, capable of adventurous and flexible thinking. It is a moment when the Government needs a new sense of direction. Mrs Thatcher's speech today should do much to reveal how far she appreciates the nature of the task before her.

Hongkong rights and freedoms

From Mr John Walden Sir, The letters from Sir William Keswick (October 1) and Mr Jack Perry (October 11) about Hongkong's future reflect a point of view rather widely held amongst those who trade into Hongkong and China but actually live somewhere else. This is that all that is needed to keep Johnny Chinaman happy is to keep the coins jingling in his pocket.

Of course, everyone likes to make a quick buck, and Sir William's "British merchant adventurers and nimble-witted Chinese" are no different. But to keep harping on maintaining Hongkong's prosperity and stability as if money and civil order were the only things that they care about is seriously to misjudge Hongkong people's concerns about their long-term future.

For a full year spokesmen of the Chinese, British and Hongkong governments have been publicly avowing their determination to maintain Hongkong's prosperity and stability up to and beyond 1997. Like Mr Jack Perry, most Hongkong people probably think that the Chinese can do it, even without British help. Yet they are still deeply apprehensive about 1997.

In fact, it seems to me that it is not the uncertainty about a prosper-ous and stable future that is causing confidence, money and people to desert Hongkong. It is a feeling of certainty, growing day by day in people's minds, that in 1997, or even before, authoritarian British colonial rule is going to be replaced by authoritarian Chinese Communist rule.

Hongkong people well know which they prefer, because more than a million of them have voluntarily left China to live in Hongkong since 1949. Many have died, or risked death, to get there.

Neither the British nor the Chinese Government has yet made any explicit statement indicating the position they propose to take in regard to the freedoms and civil rights now enjoyed by Hongkong citizens. Furthermore, the Hongkong Government has officially rejected a proposal that a referendum be eventually held to test the official assurances "that the outcome of the negotiations will be acceptable to the people of Hong-

Such obtuseness over a matter of such fundamental human importance cruelly serves to deepen Hongkong people's worries about their future and the future of their young children.

The vacuum in political leadership that an unimaginative attitude to public participation by the Hongkong Government in the running of Hongkong has helped to create has left the Hongkong people uniquely ill-prepared to help them-selves in this predicament. It has increased the weight of responsibility falling on the British Govern-ment to protect their interest in the current negotiations.

The most important of these is the inviolability of their freedoms. It is simply not good enough to say, as Mr Edward Heath did, when visiting Hongkong recently, that Hongkong people should have no say in their future. Neither he nor any law-abiding British citizen has ever spent a night wondering if the Special Branch will knock at his door. No one has the right to deny that same peace of mind to the citizens of Hongkong.

Yours sincerely, JOHN WALDEN, St John's College, University of Hong Kong, 82 Poktulam Road,

Churches in decay

From the Reverend Brian H. King Sir, Clifford Longley's article of September 19 on the need for radical thinking for inner-city churches has wider implications.

This parish, too, suffers from "the tyranny of buildings". We have a very large 1930 church which, due to basic structure faults (known about since shortly after its completion), now needs a vast amount of money for repair and renovation.

The present congregation is anxious to solve the problem once and for all so that future worshippers will not be beset by the burden of a building they cannot afford to keep up. We should like to demolish the building and seek an alternative place of worship. However, our diocesan authorities tell us that without a church building the parish cannot exist and they would hesitate before licensing any other building.

Hanging over our heads also is the problem of insurance, for it is the Vicar and parochial church council who must foot the difference should public liability insurance cover be inadequate to meet the needs of a claim made.

It appears that the Church of England has no machinery for dealing with a lively parish with a redundant church building. But it would do well to realize that even lively congregations are only human and can eventually become so demoralized by abortive efforts to put things right that numbers dwindle and then redundancy does become a real threat. Yours faithfully,

BRIAN H. KING. St Elisabeth's Vicarage, 266 Victoria Drive, Eastbourne, East Sussex September 30.

Part of the third paragraph of Mr Q. H. M. Gage's letter on pensions on October 11, referring to employees in non-contributory schemes, should have read: "and they were compelled, as a condition of employment, to join the scheme. Furthermore, they were not allowed to set up their own private arrangements, it they so wanted."

Fairness in sentencing policy

From Mr Anthony Lester, QC Sir. Why should the murderer of a police officer or a prison officer normally expect to spend at least 20 years in prison whereas a police officer or a prison officer guilty of the murder of a prisoner will not normally face a 20-year minimum

Examples of murders in custody are happily very rare in this country. However, the equal protection of the law depends upon the principle that public servants and private persons are treated alike. Yours faithfully.

ANTHONY LESTER. 2 Hare Court, Temple, EC4. October 13.

From Mr Keth Simpson Sir, According to a report and a leading article in your paper today (October 12) it is proposed to alter the existing appeal system from the crown courts so as to permit the prosecution to appeal against the imposition of inadequate sentences to the Court of Appeal Criminal Division.

The object apparently is not to enable the Appeal Court to after the sentence in question, but merely to give it the opportunity to pro-nounce, if it so wishes, on the inadequacy of that sentence and to give guidance on the appropriate sentence for the particular type of crime for subsequent instances of

Youth custody From Ms Dora Belford and others

Sir, In the course of our work as criminal lawyers we have experi-enced a serious failing in the workings of the Criminal Justice Act 1982. On May 24, 1983, sections of that Act which pertain to the sentencing of offenders between the ages of 17 and 21 came into force. Under the Act a sentence of youth custody replaces imprisonment and borstal training.

However, such a sentence may only be passed if the court "is of the opinion that no other method of dealing with the offender is appropriate." If the court feels that the existing forms of non-custodial sentence are inappropriate, then it has no alternative but to pass a sentence of youth custody or a detention-centre

Before the Act came into force a court could suspend a period of imprisonment when dealing with an offender in the 17-21 age category. This form of sentence was a good alternative to an immediate term of imprisonment, as well as providing effective form of preventive Since the coming into force of the

Regulating air fares

From Air-Vice Marshal Sir Brian

Sir, In reporting the Air Transport Users' Committee's proposals for a new system of flexible air fares (September 30) your Transport Editor added that it saw this "as a step towards deregulation of domestic air services". In fact, we see it as part of an alternative "liberalisation" process which, we believe, is far better suited to the British air passengers' needs than the type of deregulation introduced in the USA.

The AUC fears that a complete free-for-all, with any airline able to fly on any route at any fare it chose, might be a step towards a British Airways monopoly. BA already flies half the domestic passengers in this country, is six times the size of the biggest independent airline, and earns the bulk - 90 per cent - of its revenue from overseas routes, which will continue to be protected from unlimited competition.

Given this power base, whether or not it is privatised, it could easily undercut any competitor in Britain; putting Concorde on the shuttle rouses, a stunt which trebled the fuel

Air Transport Users' Committee, 129 Kingsway, WC2. October 3. Polytechnic courses Pricing gas

From Mr Terence Miller

Sir, May I comment on your report Sir, Sir Ian Morrow (October 5) (October 5) of the belated recognition by HMIs of the deficiencies suggests that the British Gas Corporation's achievement in pay-ing off loans and being for all practical purposes debt-free is the including Marxist bias - of two sociology courses at the polytechnic of North London? "Bias" of various kinds in result of a high-selling price policy.

This is not so. The repayment of teaching at higher education level cannot, and in many cases should not, be avoided. "Attacks" on bias always produce anguished references to "academic freedom". The real iniquity lies in the marking of students' work in terms of adherence to, or departure from, the Marxist party line".

During my time at PNL (1970-80) I tried to deal with this malaise, even, latterly, calling in all finals examination papers in sociology. I recall engaging in a rather acid correspondence with some scandalized external examiners. (It is interesting to note that no one ever asked for the results of my investigation.)

The root of the trouble, and the reason for my inability to stop it, lies in the fact that among external examiners, and also among CNAA (Council for National Academic Awards) course-validating teams and particularly in the British Sociological Association - are to be found, in considerable strength, those to whom "correct" sociology is Marxist.

I am delighted to read that the Secretary of State is to investigate. I hope that his range will not be limited to PNL. Certainly the CNAA should be included, but also those teacher-training institutions in which "sociology of education" and "sociology of knowledge" are, I believe, used as vehicles for Marxist indoctrination.

Yours etc. TERENCE MILLER 29 Wodehouse Terrace, Falmouth, Cornwall.

Test of worth in judging equality quite often and if this is all that is to be achieved it will merely serve to increase the existing heavy burden on the Appeal Court for no

From the Bishop of Southwark Sir. Over the past few years we have seen a mounting attack on the The only justification for creating concept of equality, an attack which has been steadily supported by extra work of this sort would be to allow the Appeal Court to alter an various contributors to the The existing sentence where it is plainly Times. The latest examples of this have just appeared in the issue of October 11 in articles by David Hart and Roger Scruton.

In both cases the word equality is used in a general, undefined way as if we all knew and agreed on what it meant. At one point David Hart acknowledges that equality of opportunity is desirable, thereby qualifying his earlier statement that "equality is not only unobtainable but also undesirable". No mention is made of equality before the law, for instance.

The underlying assumption seems to be that equality means everyone earning exactly the same amount and adopting the same kind of lifestyle. Perhaps it does mean that for a few people. But it might help the debate forward if we could recognize that it does not mean anything as simplistic as that for most of us, and that for Christians at least, equality is about people's equal worth in God's eyes.

Because of this, we stand in a relationship to one another which requires of us some recognition of that equal status. The argument centres on what will reinforce and deepen a sense of responsibility for each other, as opposed to wast will undermine and destroy it.

in a human family we instinc-tively recognize this. Children, however unequal their abilities, receive the same love and care from their parents and are made to feel their "equal" worth. It destroys family unity if the less able child is consistently treated less well and if there is no restraint on the able child's power to grab as much as possible for himself or herself.

in the Christian vocabulary we talk a lot about koinonia, or fellowship, rather than equality, and I think it could be helpful to see equality as an aspect of this fellowship or "belonging-together" of the human race, rather than pursuing equality as a goal in itself. But this should not blind us to the recognition of our fundamental equality as human beings and the need to express that by practical measures to ensure that our fundamental human needs are equally met, and that the rich do not have the "right" to get even richer while the poor get even poorer. whether in the world as a whole or in our own country. #### Council reform From Mr Oliver Stutchbury

Sir. For at least the third time since the 1939-1945 War our central Government has put the cart before the horse in the matter of local government reform. The mess is not caused by overlapping and wasteful authorities, it is caused by the arbitrary and incomprehensible way in which local government is financed. To try and deal with the former before the latter is to go about the matter the wrong way round. As one who resigned from the GLC and the Labour Party in 1976 in order to campaign (together with some thirty others) in the 1977 GLC elections on an "Abolish the GLC" ticket, may I plead with the present Government not to go ahead with its present proposals to abolish the GLC and metropolitan counties (to which end I am still totally committed) until it has made up its mind how local government is to be sensibly financed?

To go about its reform back to front will simply make the present muddle worse confounded. The only safe way forward is first of all, to get the provision of finance right.

Yours faithfully, OLIVER STUTCHBURY, The Mansion,

Shingle Street, Woodbridge, East Suffolk October 8.

Victorian values

From H. S. Hartwell

Sir, We were shown on television last week the demolition of yet another brick industrial chimney. This has become a ritual in which scapt respect is paid to the skill and accomplishment of the Victorian craftsmen who built the stacks or of the engineers who designed them.

Should not some effort be made to preserve at least the worthiest of these structures of a technology now probably quite lost to us?

Yours truly. H. S. HARTWELL, Ffosyffin, Llanfair Clydogan, ampeter, Dyfed. October 7.

If nothing else, the muchmooted delivery of five Super-Etendard fighter-bombers from France to Iraq has succeeded in reminding the world that the Iran-Iraq war is still going on and is potentially a source of danger to many others beside the two protagonists.

The aircraft, according to no less an authority than President Saddam Husain himself, have still not arrived in Iraq. But they have, it seems, left the base at Landivisiau in Brittany where they had been kept until last week and where Iraqi pilots had been trained to fly and maintain them. According to some sources, they may be dismantled and sent by sea - presumably to Agaba in Jordan, since Iran has effectively blockaded access to Iraq through the Persian Gulf since the war began. It is precisely in order to break that blockade that Iraq has sought 10 acquire the aircraft which, as Britain has cause to remember, can be used to fire AM 39 Exocet missiles at seaborne targets, with devastating effect.

Indeed, had those missiles not been used to sink British ships in the South Atlantic last year, there would perhaps not be the excitement there is now about the possibility of their use in the Gulf Exocets, it should be recalled, have been used already in the Iran-Iraq war. Iraq is believed to have had about a hundred of them in stock when the war began, and has fired them from Super-Freion helicopters both against tankers in the Gulf and against the city of Tehran. But they have not proved more than a nuisance to Iran, which - unlike Iraq - has been able to continue exporting oil through the Gulf and, largely for that reason; is now in a much more comfortable financial and economic position than its antagonist. In the war of attrition which has developed, Iran now looks to have the longer wind. Iraq, which began the war three years ago looking for a quick victory against a foe apparently para-

EXOCETS IN THE GULF lysed by revolutionary chaos, now finds its resources heavily overstretched in a trial of stamina with a larger and richer enemy determined to fight to the death and willing, apparently, to make unlimited sacrifices in the process. The Iraqi army has so far successfully withstood Iranian attempts to carry the war across the frontier, but the danger that Iraq will eventually collapse from sheer exhaustion, like Germany in 1918, is clearly

It is therefore not surprising that Iraq seeks by every means possible to break the stalemate. The Super-Etendards, which President Saddam now says will be delivered by the end of this month, have been presented as such a means. From them, Exocets can be fired with a much better chance of penetrating antiaircraft defences. With them, Iraq hopes to turn the tables on Iran by rendering unusable the Iranian oil terminal at Kharg Island - either by destroying the loading facilities at the terminal itself or by sinking supertankers on their way to it - or, at least, hopes by the threat of doing this to deter Iran from further attacks on Iraqi shipping and so to break the blockade. France is willing to help in this enterprise because she shares at least some of Iraq's desperation at the way the war is going. The French economic stake in Iraq believed to be close to eight billion dollars - is such that any outcome of the war involving a collapse of the Iraqi regime and repudiation of its debts is regarded in Paris as a disaster to be averted at almost any cost. But, the French argue, it is not just French economic interests that are at stake. An Iranian victory, and the establishment of a militant Shiite regime in Baghdad, would have incalculable effects throughout the region. At worst the entire Middle East oil supply could fail into the hands of fanatically anti-Western Muslim fundamentalists. Other Western powers, while sharing this concern, have grave doubts whether escalating the war in the Gulf can be the right way to meet it. They doubt the wisdom, let alone the legality, of helping Iraq to attack neutral shipping in the Gulf. They also doubt whether the Super-every Iranian cockle-boat.) the oilfields of Iraq's Arab backers, notably Saudi Arabia, Experience scarcely justifies any optimism about that enterprise.

Etendards will in fact give Iraq the capacity to cut off Iran's oil exports. Iran's airforce, even though hampered by lack of key parts for its F14s and Phantoms, is still not to be written off completely; and even if the international supertankers were frightened away from Kharg Island, there is the possibility that they could be loaded at Simi near the mouth of the Gulf ~ thought to be out of Super-Etendard range from Iraqi airfields - with small Iranian tankers running the gauntlet between there and Kharg. (Iraq is unlikely to have an Exocet for Ironically enough that is what

France's allies hope rather than fear, for they would regard it as preferable to the likely Iranian riposte if Iraq did succeed in closing Kharg down altogether, which would be either to try and close the Straits of Hormuz, thereby cutting off all oil supplies from the Gulf, or to attack or both. Either of those acts would cause such grave disruption of the West's oil supplies that the United States would very probably have to intervene militarily to reverse the consequences. The world is not so short of crisis points and international tension that this scenario should be welcomed by

With luck, things will not go that far. At present France is going through various diplomatic contortions to try and ensure that, even when-delivered, the Super-Etendards do not have to be used. But all these really amount to trying to browbeat Ayatollah Khomeini into accepting a compromise with a regime that he has sworn to destroy.

Key to understanding the cause of schizophrenia By Pearce Wright, Science Editor.

Schizophrenia is the commonest disease affecting long-stay patients in psychiatric hospitals. Despite its prevalence, little is known about the changes in the brain which produce the symptoms of this severe mental disease.

But recent medical research findings have given some indications of what to look for in the way of abnormal signs of brain chemistry and shape recorded by new diagnostic comeras. One class of transillizing drugs is found to be especially affective in Schizophrenia and these compounds have one action in common: an ability to block the effects of dopamine in the brain. Dopamine is a neurotransmitter, a chemical released by a nerve cell to pass a signal to the next cell.

drugs given to these patients. On the other hand, some success has been obtained from an entirely different approach. Several psychologists and physiologists have results from a variety of different tests, including electro-encephalograph (EEG) measurements, of brain wave patterns which indicate that the left half of the brain is working abnormally in the

Mr Nigel Lawson told Conservatives at Blackpool on Wednesday that he expected the economy as a whole - which includes the more prosperous service sector - to grow by up to 3 per cent this year compared with the 2 per cent prediction made in the Budget. There were no signs that the recovery was petering out, he said.

But yesterday Sir Campbell Fraser, president of the CBI, said industrialists were lowering their expectation of growth this year and there were worries about the outlook for the upturn next year.

A consensus built on compromise

In the labyrinthine world of international trade negotiations, no corner is more obscure than export finance subsidies for capital goods and big projects. But those prepared to cut through the complexities of the new consensus can draw a sigh of relief that peace has broken out in one of the potentially most explosive and expensive areas of reverse protectionism. They will also find that, as with so many of these bureaucratic compromises, the potential for distortion and ultimately corruption on discretionary subsidies remains high.

If it was just a matter of governments trying clinch export deals offering meconomic credit terms, the matter might easily be resolved.

The problems really start because different interest rates prevail in different countries and, more important, on different currencies. In theory, the interest rate differentials (reflected in forward currency markets) should match the likely future movements of currencies against each other. But as any exporter or currency dealer knows, real life is not like that. Hence countries with high interest rate currencies, like France or Italy, argue that they are at a disadvantage in exporting, while countries with low-interest currencies (LIRCs), like Germany and Japan, cry cheat if high interest rates embeddized. In practice is was the Americans who wanted to set minimum interest rates more in line with market rates to cut the public spending involved in sub-sidies. This argument threatened to lead to a complete breakdown after the old consensus ran out earlier this year. The main point, therefore, is that a new consensus has been reached, removing the threat of a widly expensive and selfdefeating interest subsidy

When it comes to detail, as in all good international cancus races, everyone can claim to have won. The minimum interest rates for high-interest currencies have been cut, pleasing the French. But future rates are now to be regulated automatically by a system worked out by the OECD secretariat on the basis of changes in market rates on the IMF's basket of cur-

What this means is that, unless world interest rates fall meanwhile, the small cuts agreed to operate from October will be eleminated as soon as the first automatic adjustment is made in January, leading to progressive cuts in subsidies.

In any case, countries like France and Italy will still be able to offer large nominal interest rate subsidies.

But LIRC nations can still offer lower nominal

The advantage depends on the importers' willingness to take a risk on these currencies not rising to offset their interest rate advantage.

On the face of it, as one big British exporter found on clinching an Eastern block deal, there could be a big advantage in British exporters quoting in marks or yen especially when the importing developing country has a big mark of yen currency risk.

As Japan and Germany are huge importers of primary commodities, this applies to many Third World countries. So we may well see a progressive switch to yen and marks as international trading currencies, something that will greatly annoy both these cantious countries.

US steps in after big run on bank

From Bailey Morris, Washington The US Government has saved the First National Bank of Midland, in the largest oilproducing region of west Texas, after it reported a string of losses on evergy-related loans which triggered a big run on deposits beginning in late August. News surfaced yesterday that two federal agencies have lent about £700 (£466m) over a number of months to the bank to prevent it from going under. Its failure would have been the largest in the US since the collapse of the Penn Square Bank of Oklahoma.

The Federal Desposit Insurance Corporation disclosed the bank's problems during a $100m - one of the largest in its history - to First National. Normally the agency, which was created after the Depression

Sales at £401.7mm compare with £394.0mm in 1982. Sales are not recorded in 1983 for Venezuela which is now an associate. This change, together with the disposal and closure programme in diversifications, leaves sales value 4% ahead of 1982 for current business. This increase is attributed. to OECD exchange movements. Volume was held overall. Prices have moved ahead in most parts of the world but the sharp effect of South American currency devaluations, when expressed in Sterling, represents a reduction in the value of our sales in South America equivalent to 3% of total

Trading profits at £38.0mn were 21% up on 1982 £31.4mn with margins at 9% compared with 8%. OECD exchange rate movements added £3.1mn to profits.

Interest charges were down at £17.1mn compared with 1982 principally due to the improvement in gearing achieved in 1982.

Pre-tax profits of £33.8mn were 30% up on the first half of 1982. The results recorded in all regions, excepting South America which was down 25%, were considerably improved and continued the highly satisfactory trends that we foresee for our various activities. The severe down-turn in profits in South America, which included some loss of volume but not market share, reflects the action taken by the governments of the South American countries in their attempts to resolve their external payments difficulties through deflation of economic activity. The financial base of our businesses in the region is satisfactory under prevailing circumstances.

The rate of tax at 38% is lower than the provision for January/June 1982 and is the rate that we expect for the full year.

Profit before texation in the current cost accounts reduces to £17.2mm (1982 pre-tax historical £26.0mm, pre-tax current cost £8.6mm).

Net debt compared with shareholders' and minority funds is expected to be 29% (1982 26%) at the end of 1983.

Extraordinary losses at £6.0mm are about half of the level that we anticipate for the year as a whole. These losses represent the costs which are being incurred during the period arising from reorganisation and closure programmes in the U.K. and Europe.

Trading conditions are encouraging in all regions other than South America. During periods of high inflation and devaluation South American profits have a much greater effect on our July/December results than they do in January/June. As these are down some 25%, overall Group results for the second half of 1983 will be lower than those for the second half of 1982. Nevertheless, if present trends in the U.K., U.S.A. and Australia continue, our overall performance for the year should be

An interim dividend of 1.5p per share (1982 1.4p) will be paid on 30th December, 1983, to ordinary shareholders on the register on 11th November, 1983.

Why gold relief may be short-lived

esterday to close a whisker above $399 an ounce, thereby stilling fears that the crash towards $300 had begun, But the relief may be momentary. Not only are the chances of gold ending the year at $450 slim - a reasonable hope a few months ago-but the current level looks precarious.

The weakness of the gold price can be seen in two ways, one by looking at the curcum-stantial evidence, the other by looking at fundamentals.

On the first count, it must be argued forcibly that if the debt crisis, the IMF running short of cash, the endless feuding in Lebanon and in the Gulf, and the shooting down of the Korean jet did not push up gold, very little else will. In the same vein, gold seems to have discounted the continuing strength of the dollar.

If one accepts that all such factors are broadly discounted, the present price must be largely supported by either funda-mentals or the time-honoured fear of inflation.

But the "fundamentals" of supply and demand offer small consolation because they have not essentially changed since last year. Jewelry demand has been firmer, but speculative demand is almost absent, and mine supply has not varied enough to explain price behav-

So what of inflation? Investors really began to buy gold in large quantities as an inflation hedge in 1978 when the price was under $200. Since then the average gold price has been $392, yet the inflation rate would have implied a price of base was dwindling.

That pushed the management into a restructuring of production facilities, particularly in Britain and Europe. Money was also pumped into the Australian and North American businesses. The programme is just about complete and has started producing significant benefits.

That is just as well, because current figures show a 25 per what investors believe, or is cent drop in income from major trading profits contributor, Latin America.

The exchange rate also helped. Each cent improvement the dollar contributes £250,000 to pre-tax profits. So with last year's figures com-puted on a dollar/sterling rate of $1.70 and this year on a rate of £1.50, up to £5m has been carned from the weakness of the

The main beneficiary has been the Coats side of the business, particularly Jaegar and the quality cashmere and knitwear sides

But the Latin American downturn will have a much greater effect on profits in the second half, so the company creased competition in a period when the industrial customer admits that the current second half will not match last year's £50.9m,

Latin America contributed £35.6m to 1982's trading profit of £97m. So a full-year year contribution looks to be about £25m. If the exchange rate stays weak and the other divisions "more than balance" the Latin American drop, then Coats Patons could end the year about breathing a sigh of relief that it final stage last year, but in the has successfully bridged what longer run the Chancellor may could have been a very sticky be the decisive figure.

Stores

Empire Stores (Bradford) seems to have emerged with the best of both worlds despite the Commission's Monopolies block on the takeover bid from Great Universal Stores.

Empire's main problem has always been its inability to contain or collect bad debts. At one point the City was talking of the £37m Gus bid as a rescue. The talk now is all about recovery.

Despite the Government insisting that Gus reduce its Empire shareholding from 29.9 per cent to 9.9 per cent by January 1985, an agreement on a "knowhow" deal allows Gus to help Empire in the areas of recruitment, bad debt and general systems control.

Yesterday Mr John Gratwick, Empire's chairman, unveiled interim figures which cut losses from £1,9m to £666,000 for the 28 weeks to August 13.

There in no halftime dividend again, but Empire should Time Products declare a profit by the end of the Half year to 31.7.83 year and pay a small divedend.

Gus's support begins in sarnest next year. If the recovery continues the expertise should be able to lift the Empire share price considerably

The Pandora's Box that London Brick opened but can't close

the long-term trend is unappeal-

Since the early 1970s, British brick deliveries have come down a third and may never recover to those former levels. London Brick's longer term position is worse than for other brickmakers. Its main product is cheap fletton bricks of which it has a monopoly because of its exclusive access to the belt of

These bricks accounting for about 38 per cent of the total eries: Mr Peter Watson will be appear to go against all the market have been hit hardest by managing director from conventional rules about never the trend away from bricks to November 7.

Fed by the upturn in private while common building bricks housebuilding, the brick industry may be booming new. But other than London Brick,

There will always be a market for flettons, both as a basic building material and for cheap facings, but there is much better potential in the more expensive, high quality facing brick which housebuyers like and architects

It is here that the ciue to Hanson's interest lies. Hanson owns Britain's second largest facing brickmaker, Butterley Building Products, a successful company which last year made pretax profits of nearly £6m.

Flettons may be at the bottom of the pile, marketed and made differently from other bricks, but it is accepted that they still determine the pricing structure for the entire indutry. The industrial and commercial logic of combining a fletton and non-fletton brickmaker is

Hanson could move into London Brick, and curb production to prevent any recurrence of oversupply, put a floor outstripped supply and consequently prices and help the entire industry, including Butterley, to build up margins and achieve potentially dramatic improvements in profitability.

Long term production cut-backs at London Brick would in turn allow Hanson to realize substantial amounts of cash by selling the company's agricultural land bought originally for its clay deposits, but never likely to be used because of the falling market.

Hanson could move in and curb production

It is no wonder that Hanson has not preached this logic publicly. The industry believes that it is the sort of logic that guided London Brick's takeover bid for Ibstock Johnsen, the largest non-fletton brickmakers.

But the Monopolies and Mergers Commission which dealt with that bid fails to deal adequately with this possibility. The report is remarkable only for its detailed breakdown of market shares in the industry and for exploring the precarious financial state of Ibstock Johnsen when it agreed to the merger last Christmas.

The report says: "We have been told by both Ibstock and Butterley that they do not follow a price leader in the facing brick market but price independently according to production costs and market costs." As one industry source says dismissively, "they would say that, wouldn't they?"

London Brick won clearance from the commission to acquire Ibstock in August, but decided not to go ahead because it felt the company had become too expensive.

It probably also feared provoking Hanson into action by attempting itself what But-terfly would dearly like to do, combine high-level fletton and non-fletton brick production

Mr David Taylor, an investment analyst with stock broker Scrimgeour, Kemp-Gee, says: ra's box when it bid for Ibstock by raising the possibility of structural changes in an industry which was thought barred from making them by the authorities. Now it cannot get it shut again."

Ibstock, whose marketing operation has a high reputation in the industry, has appeared and disappeared like a Cheshire cat over the last six months.

Redland, another big facing for Ibstock, but withdrew in the light of the commission reference. Instead it made a separate deal with Ibstock to take over its loss-making Netherlands offshoot. dropped its bid for Ibstock but has not abandoned its ambition to become a force in the non-fletton area. It plans to do this by a combination of green field, development and buying up some of the smaller brick makers, which together account for as much as 45 per cent of the facing brick market.

Among these, the obvious candidate for a bid is Nottingham Brick. For that company, however, London Brick could face competiton form C H Beazer, an ambitious West Country property developing and contracting group which has been trying to build a presence in brick making.

It bought Westbrick in 1981 and Bowater Crossley's three brickworks on Teeside last month. It also owns a 17 per cent stake in Blockley's, the Shropshire specialist brickmakers, and would almost certainly bid for it were the company not

Dithering over a flying start

Trade and Industry Ministers, notably Mr Norman Lamont. have been plunged further into a quandary by the decision of British Caledonian Airways, that bastion of free enterprise in British airline business, to place firm orders for seven A320 European airbuses. The aeroplane, it will be recalled, has yet to leave the drawing boards of the Airbus not do so until the thorny issue of financing is settled among the partners.

The French - in whose territory the consortium builds the Airbuses - have displayed a great willingness to offer a great willingness to other continuing support to a pan-European civil aerospace in-dustry and Air France and the domestic airline, Air Inter, have ordered a total of 35 A320s and taken options on a British Airways, however, has for the moment shunned the new aircraft, and Lufthansa of West Germay is dithering. And the governments of the two countries clearly still need convincing that the 150-seat aircraft is worth the estimated development expenditure of £1,300m. The British share of the Airbus consortium is 20 per cent, held by British Aero-space, and the final cost of British involvement could be as much as £400m depending upon what we make for the airliner.

The BCal decision appears to have given the A320 a much greater chance of a successful birth and there are those in BAe, frustrated at the long delay in a funding decision from Whitehall, who beleive that the Government is now duty-bound to raid taxpayers'

Sir Adam Thompson, the chairman of BCal, was careful this week not to be drawn into the argument. He liked the plane, he said, and was confident it would be built, but making it was nothing to do woth him and it was not his job to persuade the Government to put up the money.

BCal admits that the choice of aircraft to replace its aging BAC 1-11s was "a very close race", with the proposed Boeing 737-300 and the McDonnel Douglas MD-90 coming in only just behind the offering similar qualities, why did BCal choose the one whose funding is the most insecure? Expansionist-minded Adam (he spent £3m this week buying Associated Communications Corporation's Jetsave charter tour company) says he wants BCal to be the catalyst to bring the new Airbus venture to fruition. He also believes that if the A320 does not fly, Airbos Industries will probably not produce another model and, like most of his dependent upon one or two American plane makers. In any case, if the A320 fails to materialize, the BCal order can be switched else-where, and the company will still have its refurbished I-11s in use up to the end of the counterparts, he dreads being

The only other wholly new aircraft in the 150-seater race is Boeing's 7-7 which, while if remains a "paper aeropiane". has already cost the Americans $50m to develop. Significantly, Boeing did not even attempt to sell the 7-7 to BCal attempt to sell the 7-7 to BC at during recent negotiations, but relied on the new version of the tried and trusty 737. Boeing, it seems, is not yet convinced seems, is not yet convinced that the 150-seater market is going to be big enough to justify the expenditure.

Meanwhile, the British Government has to ponder the same issues. With oil prices stabilising, will a new, highly fuel-efficient but highly expensive airliner be in great demand this decade? Airbus Industrie is yet to make a profit for its partners and is unlikely to do so until there is a significant ordering spree by

The Government is planning to reach a decision by the end of the year, but there is no need to hurry. More prudent would be to give priority to the International Aero Engines project, in which Rolls-Royce has a 30 per cent stake, and would involve a similar £400m injection of launch aid.

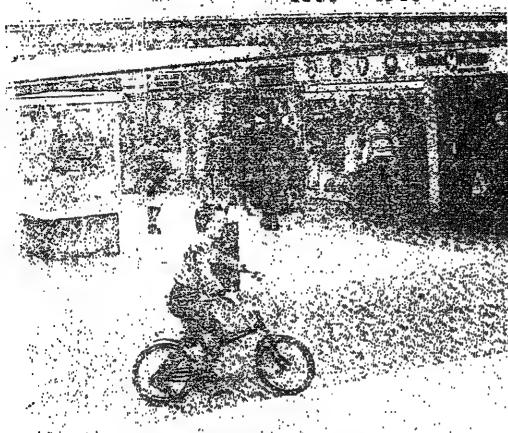

Orders and options for the A320 now total 80. Another big order, say for another 20 aircraft, could tip the balance in favour of backing the project. Until then, ministers should sit on their hands.

Oueen Victoria is said to have ordered her carriage blinds to be lowered as the royal train passed the industrial squalor of the town, from which the iron sinews of her Empire were being shaped.

At about the same time, the prestigious Edinburgh Review, a note on the town, said; The very ground seems on fire, the representations of Pandemonium in an old edition of Paradise Lost'

In direct contrast, it is also the home of world-famous lead crystal manufacturers such as Royal Brierley, Smart Crystal, Thomas Webb and Sons and Webb Corbett.

From metals to plastics

While considerable diversification has taken place since 1945, metal-based industries still play their part in Dudley's economy. There are more than 90 companies engaged in producing ferrous and nonferrous metals, and over 200 involved in various sectors of metal goods manufacturing.

Engineering is also important, with firms supplying the automotive industry with components, accessories and other equipment.

Inevitably, Dudley's economic and productive base has extended over the years far beyond metals and engineering. It now includes textiles, plastics, chemicals, electronics and a

In the West Midlands' economic crash, the borough has been devastated by unemploy-ment, which has varied in the space of the last six months from 18.8 per cent to 17.45 per cent, representing a total of 28,281. The workforce of 91,816 males and 56,371 females comprises 53 per cent skilled workers, 22 per cent semi and unskilled, 20 per cent professional and managerial, and 5 per cent others. Jock Bruce-Gardyne, writing in The Times on Sept. 14, said: The first priority now is what to do about the most embattled of unassisted areas, the West Midlands."

Dudley is well aware of that particular problem. Its unemployment rate compares with 14 per cent in Scotland, which is an assisted area, but neither Dud-ley nor the West Midlands are included in that privileged company.

This leaves Dudley at a positive disadvantage, with only one financial carrot to tempt prospective developers and investors - its Enterprise Zone, which has been alow to take off in its two years' existence. Even allowing for

Keith Duesbury, Dudley's Industrial Information Officer. said that the appointment of John Butcher as Minister with special responsibilities for the region, the setting up of an innovation team at the Department of Industry regional office and additional funding under the Small Engineering Firms Investment Scheme must be a step forward.

There is the Glynne Arms, or "Crooked House", which leans at an alarming angle through mining subsidence (bottles roll uphill and customers stagger when sober), where Edward VIII when Prince of Wales enjoyed a pint as a contrast to the gilded pleasures of nearby Himley Hall, then the home of the Earl of Dudley, where he

The Black Country shows its vigour

Dudley's Enterprise Zone (EZ) came into being in July 1981. For the next 10 years it will provide the premier industrial development opportunity for between 5,000 and 10,000 new jobs. The zone originally ex-tended over 540 acres, and two months ago Lord Bellwin, Minister for Local Government, announced an extension of 105 acres covering the redundent Round Oak Steelworks site.

It is a site where industrial regeneration is seen to be happening with the extensive dismantling of obsolescent Black Country, the cradle of the buildings, the massive movement of earthworks for land show once again the vigour and stabilization, road improvements and the new industrial estates, parts of which are operating with increasing success. The Round Oak closure, with the heavy loss of 1,300 jobs, was a profound shock to Dudley. The decision to incorporate the site and thus sweep away the legacy of the past was seen as an expression of faith in the ability of the people of the enterprise needed to restore its the region, which, it is said, is industrial fortunes. The EZ has not had an easy passage but has survived some well-aimed sniping to reach a point where it has created 450 jobs by the end of its second Dudley's is the only EZ with all land within private ownership. This has put it into the sights of the Labour leaders of West Midlands County Council, who have been among its fiercest critics. The general line of attack is that the spending of vast sums of taxpayer's money on giving firms a rates "holiday" offers no solutions to the real problems of not a recessionary one but the decline of its traditional industry. It was said that the net increase of four jobs in the Dudley EZ in its first year had cost £909,000 in lost rates and had only attracted 26 firms employing 193 people.

But Roger Latham, economist and head of Dudley's Industrial Development Unit, says the signs of progress were good. Employment had held steady and the 400 plus jobs created after two years had been through firms expanding or by new companies setting up. Mucklow's Enterprise trading estate was more than 60 per Jack Edmonds, leader of the council, has admitted that the zone has "been extremely slow to fire up". If it had not been for the efforts of developers such as Mucklows and Glynwed, operations would have been at a standstill.

What is now seen as a crucial turning point came in April this year with the purchase of the Round Oak site by the galvanic Richardson twins from neighbouring Oldbury, men who are

Dudley has easy access to the M1, M5 and M6 motorways and its location at the heart of England provides fast and easy communications with the surrounding area and other commercial centres.

The council's Highways and Planning Committee is responsible for the maintenance of almost 500 miles of road on behalf of the West Midlands County Council and provides nearly 8,000 car spaces in 100 car parks.

The West Midlands region of the Confederation of British industry recently urged that the long delayed "Black Country Route" linking the A4123 to the M6 at Bentley at a cost of £26m was a project which must be started as soon as possible to help industrial regeneration.

British Rail has stations at Coseley, Dudley Port, Stourbridge Junction, Lye, Cradley and Old Hill, Future upgrading of the Inter-City track between Wolverhampton, Birmingham and London, improvement of rolling stock and the opening of an Inter-City station at Oldbury about four miles away, should bring an increase in Black Country passengers and a substantial cut in journey time. Dudley has a colourful and busy market six days a week There are three pedestrianized shopping areas and all the major multiples are presented together with smaller "character" shops. Stourbridge and Helesowen are the two other principle shopping areas and, as in Dudley, investments by the public and private sector has resulted in new developments with an increasing variety of high quality shops and stores.

Dudley can offer a wide range of housing for sale or to rent, with styles ranging from the modern executive family house the traditional country cottage. Housing developments include attractively landscaped modern family housing estates and charming older village communities situated in the borough or set in the surrounding countryside.

Schools are organized under the comprehensive system. More than 50,000 pupils are in full time education in primary. 35,000 people are involved in some form of further education.

ECOLOGY

The first local nature reserve to be declared in the county of the West Midlands was in the Blackbrook Valley, Netherton, as a contribution to the European campaign for urban remaissance. Dudley has the highest accessed at 1428 of highest acreage at 1,428 of derelict land in the county and seen as being closely linked with the adjacent enterprise zone in the local authority's efforts to pursue a balanced approach on regeneration and enhancement of the urban environment. Dudley has been designated as a derelict land clearance area and attracts a 100 per cent capital grant from the the Government. The main participants in the project which got underway in 1980, with the nature reserve declaration in September 1981, are the counthe Nature Conservancy Council and Landscape Inst tute.

At the outset, various agencies were looking for a suitable area with environmental prob-lems which would benefit from the use of the best techniques from Wolverhampton and an for reclamation, improvements and community involvement and in May 1981 came the formal launch of the project.

Mining rights

It was at that point that one of the most contentious matters, still very much alive today, began to emerge. Rumours began circulating which have since become fact, that Grace, Countess of Dudley proposed to exercise her mining rights and open cast for coal around Doulton's Clayfield area of the valley. Her application for planning consent is now before the Labour-controlled county council in the face of consider able local opposition. There is resentment that a family that prospered so mightily from coal in the last century is still apparently able to pursue a right of seignory in the late twentieth

As well as concentrating on the area itself, the local authority is placing a great deal of deal emphasis on encouraging overseas investment and a campaign has been launched, directed primarily at North America. Dudley will have a new spur to endeavour as the result of last Government had agreed in principle for yet another industrial estate in the Black Coun-

It was thought that the 100acre site, probably in the Wednesbury area about five miles from Dudley, could create up to 3,000 jobs under a £25m additional package of support for the West Midlands. The locating of a site had been in the hands of the English Industrial Estates Corporation which has Government support. One prime site that was indentifiable is the redundant Patent Shaft steelworks which closed in 1980 with the loss of 1,500 jobs. The Bilsion steelworks site was thought to be less acceptable because of its division by a main railway line and a canal.

Mr Donald Richardson is happy with the Government's plan saying that the Black Country already had a strong selection of privately run estates. FOOTBALL: VICTORY EARNS REPRIEVE FOR THE PRESENT THAT COULD BE DEFEAT FOR THE FUTURE

Robson must rebuild now

At 1.25 on Thursday morning. At 1.25 on Thursday morning, while the customs and baggage men at Luton Airport shuffled their feet impatiently in their wish to get home. Bobby Robson, unaware of the hour, stood gazing into the future of his uncertain England team for the benefit of those of us scribes still moderately lucid on the way back from Budagest.

There were noises off from his international committee chairman, muttering with a stage whisper. A realistic view of Hungary's Greenwood, who commented, when someone mentioned that few teams besides England had twice won in Hungay, that there would indeed be Hungay, that there would indeed be plenty more "if they keep playing like that". My opinion is that Robson should take no notice whatever of this result in planning for the World Cup, whether or not some unexpected results find England scraping into the European Grants.

When asked, at the beginning of their careers as international managers, whether the World Cup ought to be the main objective rather than the European Championship, both Graenwood and, last season, Robson denied that this was desirable, or possible, because a team needed "results" for the benefit of public confidence.

Robson said at Luton that the extra training period provided by the cancellation of League, fixtures last weekend had been of significant value, removing tension and producing a club atmosphere. That is the simple trath: the clusten between our Football League trains which win European trophies and the national side is the result of nothing more than the difference in training epportunities. With or without this England will only radiscover a team as efficient as those of Sir Alf Ramsey, pre-1972 when there is a continuous, active selection.

Therefore Robson should now.

Their character will be as important as ability, as it was with Roger Hunt in 1966. Only by making such chear-cut decisions now, augusties with a few more free weekends, will Robson find a team now, sogether with a few more free weekends, will Robson find a team with a real chance.

The same priciple must apply to other positions. Robson thinks that international players develop rela-lively slowly, but if they are already regular first division players, then it is not too early for the international test. That argument must apply to Callaghan, Gregory, Caton, Walsh and Stein. The time for change is

The pessimist and the optimist: Greenwood (left) has little of the hope that Robson has.

In recent years Scotland and Northern Ireland have captured the domestic imagination in this way. Now Wales are displaying the kind of qualities which, given a setting like next year's European Cham-pionship finals, could find us all looking up that forgotten ancestor in Llangollen.

There is no doubt that if Wales maintain the form which carned maintain the form which earned them their 5-0 win over Romania in Wednesday's "friendly" at Wrexham they will reach France. Players' wages went up by over £124,000. One member of the staff earned up to £70,000, another £60,000, and nine others around £50,000.

At the annual meeting on November 3, three directors will be appointed. Mr Ellis is up for reelection and there are nom for the club's medical officer, Dr David Targett, the solicitor, John Alderson, and Alfred Chinn from the shareholders' association. There are also resolutions which, if passed, would enable the club to carry on other activities outside football and also have one paid

Mrs Podger breaks her leanest spell

Arena, Warrington.

Mrs Podger, who returned with one solitary singles win for all her efforts on an arduous trip to the Far East, suddenly conjured a 12-11, 5-11, 11-3 success against Helen Troke, the 18-year-old new England number one, who is currently stuck with a whole beap of burdensome labels, from prodigy to supergirl to world-beater. That is perhaps, the inevitable price of being England's most promising player since the former world number one Gillian Gilks in the late seventies.

Gilks in the late seventies.

Conjured is the word for Mrs Podger's win. To her indeed it must have seemed like magic. She had considered taking advice from the England manager Ciro Cinigho to take a break from competition to get out of her dreadful run of losses. "I was afraid that they were beginning to affect her confidence." he explained. Mrs Podger added: "It's only now after this win that I have really decided that I will go on."

It was the first time she had It was the first time she had played Miss Troke since losing to her in the Commonwealth Games her in the Commonwealth Games final just over a year ago. She had however, the possible advantage of knowing her opponent well, having been her regular practice partner in Hampshire until returning after marriage to the badminton backwaters of Guernsey.

The second game was more of like Miss Troke who is currently leading the grand prix points table, but in the third she was no longer herself, frequently clearing out, losing the bustle in her stride, and eventually fretting as the match tumbled away from her. Afterwards Mrs Podger, pink, wide-eyed and refreshingly exhuberant was a new

From Ray Kennedy Johannesburg

Patrick Tambay, the 34-year-old French driver who has been given his marching orders by Farrari, recorded the fastest time in the first official practice yesterday for the South African Grand Prix which will deside the World Charming.

will decide the World Champion

thip.

He gave notice that he expects to go even faster during today's final practice and that he will go all out to win tomorrow's race - leaving Ferriari wondering whether the decision to sack him was the right one.

Tambay lapped the Kyalami circuit near here in a record time of one min 6.554sec and average speed of 221,991 kilometres an bour.

Second fastest in 1 min 6.792sec was blesson Piquet of Brazil in a Brabham-BMW, followed by Alain Prost of France (Renault) and Rene Armoux in the Ferrari.

there will be no idea for settling for, say a 20 or 30 point defeat. We'll have only one thought in mind."

You stood not exceen him to say You would not expect him to say otherwise. What is instructive is the otherwise. What is instructure is the suggestion by MacMillan, a 27 year-old sales, representative, that in Britain rugby is taken very scriously, perhaps too seriously sometimes. That may be the price to pay for retaining a place as one of the world leaders in a game now seen as being increasingly market-able to an international audience and deriving thereby an increasing and deriving thereby an increasing amount of sponsorship.

MacMillan himself played football as a boy and did not take up rugby antil he was a 16 year-old at Victoria Park High School in Toronto. He found that his lack of stature – he is 5ft 7in and a few pounds under 11st – did not count assists him and quickly found his against him and quickly found his make at scrum half, graduating to senior rugby with the Toronto Barbarians. He was a replacement against New Zealand in 1980 and

The Canadians, knowing the size of the task which faces them against England at Twickenhaum tomorrow, have chosen their most mobile back row in the knowledge that there will be a desperate amount of tackling and covering to be done, David Hands writes. Russell will play No 8, rather than flanker, and he will be joined by the improving Cvitak and Godziek, who did well against England in Vancouver last year.

Four of the Canadians will have played in all five tour games: three of the backs, Wyatt, Palmer and Fraser, and the bearded lock forward, Jennings. ### Anachronism the Welsh giants choose to ignore Pembrokeshire's exciting victory over Japan on Wednesday will give a timely boost to rugby in the area but, with a shortage of competitive opportunities, this is unlikely to be anything more than of a temporary nature. There is a county champion-ship but that such a cup competition exists will come as a surprise to many, not least to quite a few Weishmen themselves. It ends up merely as a footnote in the catalogue of the season's events.

club within its jurisdiction, have been champions for two successive seasons. 1980-81 and 1981-82, over bounds all the senior clubs reside, with the exception of Lianelli, and that perhaps sums up the influence the competition has in the traditional strongholds of Welsh rugby and the low regard with which it is beld by the players.

Although called upon, it is rure player to take part. That county rugby in Wales seems an anachron-ism is reinforced by the way they retain the old county names. What then is to be made, if anything, of county rugby in Wales?
Trevor James, the Pembrokeshire coach, is unequivocal. Chib rugby is so insular and limited in his part of the world that county representation is the only chance that local players have of competing against players from other parts of Wales. This can give rise to improved standards. It is sad for him, he believes, and for the players that they cannot continue to build on Wednesday's victory. Because county rugby is not taken seriously enough, he feels, the team will lose its motivation. There is a feeling, even among the Welsh Rugby Union representatives that county rugby ought to be strengthened as a way of increasing interest in the weaker rugby areas. But the strength of Welsh rugby remains with the clubs and the clubs would object, as they have done so often in the past, that the counties should not make demands Twelve months ago the Welsh

If there is hope in the European camp and faith in their ability, there will be no charity from the Americans when the 25th Ryder Cup won or lost depending upon begins here today. In sport the United States captain, expressed his views regarding e goodwill of the biennial encounter. it was still abundantly clear that no quarter would be given.

conceded Tony Jacklin, now the captain of the European team, a three foot putt, much to the astonishment of the spectators surrounding the last green at Royal Birkdale. That act of generosity left the match all square for the first time in its history. Since then there have been no favours, no reason to rejoice. The United States remain unbeaten since Lindrick in 1957 and indeed they have never lost on home soil.

Consolation in defeat for Brecon

By Michael Stevenson

Christ's' College, Brecon, had good wins under their behts against King's, Worcester, Dean Close, Wycliffe and Belmont Abbey (who themselves had come close to defeating Cowley) when, full of confidence, they visited Sherborne.

The result was a crushing defeat for the visitors by 48-7. The Christ's College side in general, and their opinion that they had lost to an excellent team: "They were far too big and strong for us: I reckon that they are one of the best sides I've seen for years."

At least Lewis had the distinction of section the only too the of scoring the only try that Sherborne have conceded this season. Another source of consoseason. Another source of conso-lation for Christ's was that their talented captain and centre, Noble, was regarded by friend and foe alike as the best back on the field.

far when they meet Millfield. A consistently good rugby school. Lancaster Royal Grammar, have again proved their effectiveness. Their latest victims, Stonyhurst, were defeated 28-3. Lancaster's stand-off half, Hamer, is a fine effectiveness and single figure handian.

cricketer and single figure handicap gotfer, and his agility on the rugby field impressed the Stonyhurst and England Colts coach, Bryan Ashton, from broken play."

Stonyhurst have lost to Denstone Rossall and Lancaster and beaten Mount St Mary's. They are in a transitional phase, without outstanding players, but are hoping for better things before long.

The state of the s

would be the first show and the last, it seemed that ther pundits were right when the show, intended to run alternate years with the international Motor Show in caure, failed to appear in 1979. The problem was that the Society of Motor Manufacturers and Traders (SMMT) the industry's cading trade body and organizer of the Birmingham show, saw Motorfair as a direct threat to an event which was the society's bigget money-earner, Some motor manuacturers were openly critical of Earl's Court management, suggest-ing that they were bad losers not prepared to accept that switching the international show from its traditional home in Earl's Court 10 the more modern exhibition centre was a permanent move.

By 1981, however, the warring factions had settled their differences and the SMMT agreed to cooperate in running a Motorfair that year. They were given two seats on the organizing board from which they were able to ensure that member companies kept their involvement in Motorfair to a level that did not eave them unable to finance a stand at the following year's National Exhibition Centre show. In theory Motorfair is a dealers show at which motorists can negotiate new and second-car purchases on the spot, a departure from normal motor show practice. In fact more than £20m worth of business was clinched during the 1981 show and there were nearly 230,000 paying visitors. Next week's event sees even more involvement by the manufacturers with little attempt to stay in the background. There are 162 princi-pal stands occupying 20 per cent more space, in the weeks running up to the opening the manufac-nurers' publicity machines have been pouring out reams of handout material and their public relations staffs will be much in evidence at Wednesday's press preview. So is Motorfair in any way a threat to the National Exhibition Centre? A lot of people in the motor

But in the long term there may be doubt. By maintaining a presence and demonstrating a need Earl's Court is keeping alive London's hopes Birmingham's National Exhibition that some day the British Motor Show will "come home", if not to Earl's Court then to the modern exhibition centre Londoners still insist the capital should have.

New Citroen proves outstanding

crucial role of Citroen's new BX range in the campaign now being waged by Peugeot to give its subsidiary a new image with the motoring public. It has been discribed as the first Cirtoen designed for mass production, the first to have acceptable mainten-ance costs and the first to appeal to the all important fleet buyer.

Initial driving impressions indi-cated that it was also an attractive package for the family motorist looking for something a little different but still competitively priced, roomy and cheap to run. Such impressions are often misleading and all sorts of snags crop up with longer acquaintance. I am happy to report that with one reservation the BX 16 TRS I

sectors of the market. Unlike some of the larger Citroens the BX does not "wallow" on fast bends and its constant height ride is little affected by full loads. It also scores over older Citroen models in braking. Citroen enthusi-

 CHURCHILL'S BACKBENCH WAR (Radio 3, 8.05pm), Dr Shella Lawlor's talk, is a corrective to the popular view, born out of sentimentality mixed with gratifude, that Winston, the buildog saviour of the nation, was unchallenged as wer leader. Three times, Dr Lawfor recalls, Churchill was prepared to suppress the military case in favour of the political - over aid to the Middle East, to Greece, and finally to the Soviet Union. As PM, he could not count on his cabinet and, as Tory leader, could not be sure of the loyalty of his back-bench. Churchill, Dr Lawtor insists, was not a general, but a politician - even if the politics were those about the conduct of war,

On the day of the shooting, Mr Ness and his officers were following Mr Waldorf's car, hoping that Miss Susic Stephens would lead him to the fugitive. Officers began to think Mr Waldorf might be their man.

He needed to know if Martin was in the car and "the only way to do that positively was for someone who knew him to go and look and tell me". Mr Waldorf's car was stuck in the iam and it seemed a good point to make the identification.

Constable Finch went for ward. The court was told that the previous September the detective had arrested Mr Martin in a struggle during which the criminal, disguised as a women, produced two guns and fought on despite being Asked what Constable Finch should have done at the car if he believed that someone was armed and he had given a warning. Mr Ness said: "He should have told them to stay where they were, not to move not to do anything. That is what you would expect him to do. Make it clear he was a policeman ... and tell them what to do.

Asked if it was difficult for an officer to restrain a man hanging out of a car face down on the road, Mr Ness said he thought it was not. He was asked to comment on alle-gations that Constable Finch had pistol-whipped Mr Waldorf as he lay wounded and how a man should be restrained. He replied that the police were trained to "incapacitate and hold a man with the minimum amount of force".

Under cross-examination by Mr Michael Corkery QC, for Constable Finch, Mr Ness agreed that but for the bravery Constable Finch and other officers during Mr Martin's arrest last year, policemen might have been killed. Constable Finch's actions had been meritorious. During that arrest Constable Finch struck Martin across the face with his gun thinking that the man, though wounded, was still trying to

Mr Corkery read out the instructions for dealing with someone in a car and asked Mr Ness; "If one were dealing with Martin and he was armed, any police officer starting on that rigmarole might be dead before he got half way?"
Mr Ness replied that

The George Cross awarded to the hero who saved St Paul's Cathedral from destruction in September, 1940, was sold yesterday for £16,000. The previous for the medal was £2,900.

The Imperial War Museum was the underbidder, but could not match Spink's bidding power. Spink said it had bought the medal for stock.

The firm did not wish it to leave the country and hoped it might go somewhere suitable, such as St Paul's, the Mansion House or the Loudon Museum. The other highlight of the sale was a Victoria Cross group of medals awarded to Rear-newspaper on which they feel they can rely to carry their views to the mass of British voters, will continue to speak with a left-wing voice.

Mr Peter Archer, for Warley West, and Labour spokesman on trade, said last night: "It would be a very bad thing for British journalism if virtually the only paper which stated a different point of view from the rest of Fleet Street were to be in danger of losing that stance".

Sir Alex denied that the share flotation indicated any disenchantment with Fleet Street. He naintained that the move was a commercial decision that represented the best avenue for both Reed and MGN.

The sale was, he said, "a straightforward business de-cision". The MGN flotation is likely to produce up to £100m for Reed.

It was unclear whether the Reed management regarded the coming flotation of Remers, the news agency and financial communications group, as an

Race, sex and packed house for Parkinson

A vivid day. But first a note about the new technology. In some editions yesterday, most painfully the one that reached Blackpool, one of my phrases in the fifth paragraph came out three times. Being someone brought up in the old technology of newspaper production. I am not familiar with the technical term for such - an occurrence, but presumably some needle got stuck in some groove, The incident will strengthen the view of some critics that I have begun to repeat myself, and indeed never had a particularly wide repertoire in the first place. To them, I swear that the phrase was only meant to come out once. My thanks, however, to the several people who approached me yesterday to say that the best bit by far in my piece that morning was where said the same thing three

Assuming that all the above has only come out once, I now turn to yesterday's conference

The agriculture debate, which was closed by the Minister of Agriculture, Mr Michael Jopling, drew a small attendance. But for the Trade. and Industry debate, which was closed by the Secretary for Trade and Industry, Mr Cecil: Parkinson, every seat was taken, every foot of standing room full. It was a particularly graphic illustration of the way in which the in which the party has changed in recent decades -reflecting, as it did, the decline of the landed interest and the rise of the sex interest. Mr Parkinson was under no illusion that the vast crowd had come to hear a good, solid. speech about trade and industry. Wisely, he delivered them one just the same.

Ranks of Conservatives stared fixedly at him as he pressed on about such subjects as industrial output, not one of them taking in a word of what he was saying.

"I am here as Secretary of State for Industry," he began.
What must for him have been the most dreaded public appearance of his life was now under way. There could be no cancellation now. Whatever heart went out to him.

Then he thanked the people with whom he had worked as chairman. "My wife Ann joins me in those thanks and I add my thanks to her", he said. Mrs Parkinson was there on the platform looking towards him. There was polite ap. There was now a tension in the hall, not least on the platform where sat, among others, the Prime Minister, a figure to whom he owed the fame which, in this past week, he may for the first time have

But the greatest problem of the speech - how to begin it had been surmounted. Both he and those of us who wished him well, could begin to relax. Before long one could treat it like a ministerial conference speech not much different from any other. As tradition dictates at conferences, the head of the ministry began to thank his departmental ministers. Soon, like any other minister at a Tory conference, he found himself saying things that were riduculous. faintly. Baker, the world's only Minister for Information Technology", he intoned, as if Mr Baker were the product itself rather than the man who was supposed to sell it. Thus was conceit that Britain now led the world in building minis-ters for information technology, that soon we would be turning out whirring, compu-terized Ken Bakers, some programmed for the Japanese

One last ordeal remained. A Tory conference audience is capable of almost any crassness. Would it subject him to the final embarrassment a standing ovation? He loved a standing ovation as much as the next politician, but not for adultery. Mercifully, the ova-

Elsewhere, Mr Tebbit, for a superb speech responding to the industrial relations debate, got a standing ovation of one minute 55 seconds, 45 seconds longer than Mr Heseltine the previous day, according to a man who keeps records. Finally, there was a debate on immigration which the liberal-minded leadership won easily by the cumning tactic of ensuring that their critics were led by the illiberal minded Mr Harvey Proctor. An Indian speaker shouted that he was British. A lone extremist in the hall shouted that he was not The conference, perhaps much to the irritation of liberals. who want their Conservative Party to be disgraceful on these matters, agreed with the Indian. So there was some-thing for everyone yesterday. Mr Tebbit, race, sex, trade and are starting to show signs of the usual seasonal rise. Beef roasting joints so far are little changed, with topside, silverside and thick flank all ranging from £1.90 to £2.32, but stewing cuts and mince are more expensive than last week in some expensive man less week in some shops. Lamb ranges from 70p to £1.05 for whole shoulder and from £1.25 to £1.60 for whole legs. Good buys include pork chops at Tesco for £1.26 a pound, and New Zealand lamb loin chops reduced in Sainsburys to about 989 a pound. Oven ready chickens in both Tesco and Dewhurst are 59p a pound.

Fish prices are all up this week by between 1p and 7p a pound. But herring and mackerel are still super buys at around 68p and 46p a po spectively. Although some winter venetables are slightly cheaper this week, prices are slightly cheaper this week, prices remain generally high because of a poor crop and tight supplies. White and red cabbages are as much as 30p and red cabbages are as much as 30p a pound, as are Brussels sprouts. Cauliflowers are 35-45p each, courgettes 28-45p a pound, calabrese 50-60p a pound and green peppers 45-65p a pound. Potatoes are still steady in price at 12p to 16p a pound, but quality is variable and should be carefully checked. For salads, English celery at 25p to 35p a head is excellent quality and value; so, too, are Chinese leaves at 20p a pound or even less. .
